Woodrow Wilson was the 28th president of the United States The New Freedom a collection of speeches he made during his successful 1912 presidential campaign takes its name from that campaign platform In it Wilson describes the conditions necessary for freedom in a rapidly changing society and highlights the dangers from monopolies and politicians that are either bought or too cozy with business interests To combat these regressive influences Wilson stresses the need for open and participatory democracy as well as positive government intervention to promote individual rather than business freedom Throughout these speeches Wilson shows an unwavering belief in democracy and the wisdom of the people He admits that he doesn t have all the answers and begrudges those who make that claim for themselves According to Wilson politicians of all parties have been slow to recognize a change in power dynamics Whereas once workers were familiar with their bosses now workers toil for faceless corporations that have almost unlimited power over them and bear no practical social responsibilities Wilson stresses that power over others isn t a sign of wisdom or virtue and that the government should be emboldened to break up such powers to allow for a fair playing field He remarks that ignoring these new economic power relations risks disillusioning voters leaving the door open for unscrupulous politicians to promise easy answers that lead to ruin This book is part of the Standard Ebooks project which produces free public domain ebooks Public Papers of the

A Freedom Budget for All Americans Paul Le Blanc, Michael D. Yates, 2013-08 While the Civil Rights Movement is remembered for efforts to end segregation and secure the rights of African Americans the larger economic vision that animated much of the movement is often overlooked today That vision sought economic justice for every person in the United States regardless of race It favored production for social use instead of profit social ownership and democratic control over major economic decisions The document that best captured this vision was the Freedom Budget for All Americans Budgeting Our Resources 1966-1975 To Achieve Freedom from Want published by the A Philip Randolph Institute and endorsed by a virtual who's who of U.S. left liberalism and radicalism Now two of today's leading socialist thinkers return to the Freedom Budget and its program for economic justice Paul Le Blanc and Michael D. Yates explain the origins of the Freedom Budget how it sought to achieve freedom from want for all people and how it might be reimagined for our current moment Combining historical perspective with clear sighted economic proposals the authors make a concrete case for reviving the spirit of the Civil Rights Movement and building the society of economic security and democratic control envisioned by the movement's leaders a struggle that continues to this day George Bush United States. Why Worry About Future Generations? Samuel Scheffler, 2018-04-19 The things we do today may make life worse for future generations But why should we care what happens to people who won t be born until after all of us are gone Some philosophers have treated this as a question about our moral responsibilities and have argued that we have duties of beneficence to promote the well being of our descendants Rather than focusing exclusively on issues of moral responsibility Samuel Scheffler considers the broader question of why and how future generations matter to us Although we lack a developed set of ideas about the value of human continuity we are more invested in the fate of our descendants than we may realize Implicit in our existing values and attachments are a variety of powerful reasons for wanting the chain of human generations to persist into the indefinite future under conditions conducive to human flourishing This has implications for the way we think about problems like climate change And it means that some of our strongest reasons for caring about the future of humanity depend not on our moral duty to promote the good but rather on our existing evaluative attachments and on our conservative disposition to preserve and sustain the things that we value This form of conservatism supports rather than inhibits a concern for future generations and it is an important component of the complex stance we take toward the temporal dimension of our lives Cumulative
