

Igneous Rocks

Igneous rocks are created from magma, which is molten rock. The name itself tells you it's liquid, which is where the word igneous gets its name. Igneous rocks can be formed in two different ways: under the Earth's surface (intrusive) or above the Earth's surface (extrusive) (volcanic eruptions form rocks and flow from the Earth's surface).

There are many different types of igneous rock. Some of the most common are basalt, andesite, rhyolite, granite, gneiss, and obsidian.

Basalt

Basalt is one of the most common types of igneous rock. It has a dark, glassy look, and it is the second (second) of all the common igneous rocks. Basalt is formed from extremely hot, molten magma that cools from above the surface. Basalt is usually found in the form of small, dark, angular rocks, which help explain how hot and how the magma flows.

Andesite

Andesite is a medium gray, blocky rock, it formed by cooling intermediate-magma (the molten magma). This kind of magma flows from a magma chamber that is a little closer to the surface than basalt. The magma from this chamber is a little more viscous (sticky) and is hot. This means the rock is firm and makes a strong sound.

Rhyolite

Rhyolite is a light-colored and generally lighter in weight than other igneous rocks. Rhyolite is formed from the surface of a volcanic eruption. The magma chamber of a volcanic eruption is located close to the Earth's surface, and the magma that cools is very hot and sticky. The magma that cools is very hot and sticky, making it difficult for magma to pass through.

Basalt

Basalt is an intrusive or plutonic igneous rock. This means it is created by molten magma under the surface of the Earth. Basalt is formed by slowly cooling magma, which forms large crystals in it. Basalt can look quite different depending on the different shapes and colors of the crystals that are formed.

Andesite

Andesite is usually a volcanic glass. It is usually dark and very shiny. Because there are many different types of basalt, it is a hard rock because there is no gas or water in the lava when it solidifies. Andesite is usually formed when a volcanic eruption erupts.

Rhyolite

Rhyolite is one of the most common rocks you may find, and you might not even think it is a rock! It is very light and full of holes. Rhyolite is a type of igneous. It forms when magma flows slowly, trapping air inside. Rhyolite is found often in volcanic eruptions.

Volcanic Eruptions

Lake Taupō is the center of New Zealand's most important lake. It is also a volcanic eruption.

When Lake Taupō erupted around 1800 years ago, its eruption was so big that the forests and fields were not saved from the ash that it threw into the sky. That means that the ash from the eruption must have covered the whole forest.

Volcanic eruptions are not dangerous because they are not dangerous. Volcanic eruptions are not dangerous because they are not dangerous. Volcanic eruptions are not dangerous because they are not dangerous.
