

MOBILITY & MIGRATION IN THE EUROPEAN CONTEXT

Introduction to migration studies (22/11)

- Modes of Immigration Politics in Liberal Democratic States (The International Migration Review, Gary P. Freeman)
 - three models of immigration politics
 - settler societies: periodically open immigration, machineries of regulation, dense webs of interest groups
 - countries receiving mass migration since WWII: negative outlook
 - countries receiving migration since recently: crisis condition, intensifying coordination of politics within the EU

Crossed mobilities within a context of crisis (27/11)

- in the era of globalization, mobility is not only a new lifestyle but also an element in social life → the internet allows us to move even when seated
- geographical mobility: physical movement of things or people from one spatial point to another (migration or transport studies)
- social mobility: movement made by people between social positions
- new concepts: digital nomads, compressed space, traveling cultures, deterritorialization, hybridity
- Regimes of Mobility across the Globe (Journal of Ethnic and Migration Studies, Nina Glick Schiller)
 - mobility studies: developed in a period where movement of capital and labor were celebrated, first looking at every type of "traveller" through one lens and then making a distinction
 - methodological nationalism: approach to mobility studies that analyzes international movements as if they were internal to one nation-state
 - should normalise mobility but not minimize the ways in which legal status and ethnicity can make a difference in terms of ease of travel, repercussions, and gain or loss of status from being from elsewhere
 - normalisation of mobility and stasis
 - anti-globalisation studies scholars argue that speaking about "flows" of people, capital and ideas makes these phenomena seem like new concepts
 - new "mobility studies" place too much emphasis on "elite travelers" and their "liberating" travels, forgetting about other categories → question of class consciousness
 - sidelined migration types
