Ruling by Other Means Grzegorz Ekiert, Elizabeth J. Perry, Xiaojun Yan, 2020-07-30 What do states gain by sending citizens into the streets Ruling by Other Means investigates this question through the lens of State Mobilized Movements SMMs an umbrella concept that includes a range of often covertly organized collective actions intended to advance state interests The SMMs research agenda departs significantly from that of classic social movement and contentious politics theory focused on threats to the state from seemingly autonomous societal actors Existing theories assume that the goal of popular protest is to voice societal grievances represent oppressed groups and challenge state authorities and other powerholders The chapters in this volume show however that states themselves organize citizens sometimes surreptitiously and even transnationally to act collectively to advance state goals Drawn from different historical periods and diverse geographical regions these case studies expand and improve our understanding of social movements civil society and state society relations under authoritarian regimes The University of Mississippi: A Sesquicentennial History Sansing, David G.,1999 The role of federal military forces in domestic disorders, 1945-1992 Paul J. Segregated Soldiers Marcus S. Cox,2013-05-13 In Segregated Soldiers Marcus S Cox investigates military training programs at historically black colleges and universities and demonstrates their importance to the struggle for civil rights Examining African Americans attitudes toward service in the armed forces Cox focuses on the ways in which black higher education and Reserve Officer Training Corps ROTC programs worked together to advance full citizenship rights for African Americans Educators at black colleges supported military training as early as the late nineteenth century in hopes of improving the social economic and political state of black citizens Their attitudes reflected the long held belief of many African Americans who viewed military service as a path to equal rights Cox begins his narrative in the decades following the Civil War when the movement to educate blacks became an essential element in the effort to offer equality to all African Americans ROTC training emerged as a fundamental component of black higher education as African American educators encouraged military activities to promote discipline upright behavior and patriotism These virtues they believed would hasten African Americans quest for civil rights and social progress Using Southern University one of the largest African American institutions of higher learning during the post World War II era as a case study Cox shows how blacks interest in military training and service continued to rise steadily throughout the 1950s Even in the 1960s and early 1970s despite the growing unpopularity of the Vietnam War the rise of black nationalism and an expanding economy that offered African Americans enhanced economic opportunities support for the military persisted among blacks because many believed that service in the armed forces represented the best way to advance themselves in a society in which racial discrimination flourished Unlike recent scholarship on historically black colleges and universities Cox s study moves beyond institutional histories to provide a detailed examination of broader social political and economic issues and demonstrates why military training programs remained a vital part of the schools missions
