

Accounting Affairs and Fundamental Mathematics

Topic: Business | Words: 615 | Pages: 2

Modern society, having a highly developed system of commodity-money relations, is experiencing an ever-increasing need for specialists who perform accounting work. A person in this profession is not just an employee in the financial department of an enterprise or organization. This is one of the most important elements that allow one to control the stability and correctness of the business mechanism. I am expected to become an accountant, and I fully realize the significance of fundamental mathematics for my future career. Below, I will discuss the correlation between accounting affairs and the mentioned fundamental mathematics, proving that the latter serves as a foundation for the former.

Any accounting calculation always has a mathematical basis with its laws and concepts. In order to calculate VAT or other accounting calculations, one needs knowledge of fundamental mathematics and the ability to solve its problems. It can be claimed that accounting cannot exist without knowledge of mathematics and the ability to apply it in practice. The appropriate definition of accounting can be formulated as follows. This is a system based on the principles of mathematics for accounting for the property and obligations of an enterprise, financial performance, and business operations conducted by it.

In practice, an accountant must perform any arithmetic operations, with the calculation of both simple and compound interest, be able to use a matrix model of the relationship of accounts, as well as algorithmize accounting processes and draw up a mathematical description of an
