

THE COLD WAR

THE SPACE RACE

Alongside the rush to acquire nuclear weapons, the U.S. and the Soviet Union (U.S.S.R.) also engaged in a race to send man (and dog) into space for the first time.

1957 - The Soviets took an early lead in the space race and launched the first satellite in world history, named Sputnik I. Later, they sent a dog into space to test it out on living beings.

1968 - The Soviets scored again when they made world history by sending the first human to space in 1968. Cosmonaut Yuri Gagarin became a national hero in the U.S.S.R. and beyond.

1969 - The Americans stormed back and effectively "won" the space race by sending a manned spacecraft to the moon. In addition to dancing and playing golf on the moon, the U.S. planted a national flag for good measure.

1998 - Even though the Cold War officially ended in 1991, its legacy is still here. Were it not for the technological advancements of the space race, ideas like the International Space Station would not be able to be a reality.
