Patients with schizophrenia demonstrate impairments independent of an inability to accurately monitor internally generated images. Motor imagery measures the ability to generate internal images of intended but not executed motor movements. Ten patients with schizophrenia completed actual and imagined versions of a pointing task with a well defined speed-accuracy trade-off function. For controls, movement time increased as target size decreased, for both actual and imagined movements.

Despite sharing the expected speed-accuracy trade-off for actual movements, the imagined movements of schizophrenics showed no reliable relationship to target size. This was true for each patient and appeared to be independent of symptom profile. These results suggest that patients with schizophrenia are unable to generate accurate internal images of their own motor movements. NeuroReport 13:605–609 (2002) Lippincott Williams & Wilkins.

INTRODUCTION

Recent research in schizophrenia has suggested that many of the first rank symptoms of the disorder, for example the so-called delusions of control to which the patient believes external forces are controlling their thoughts or actions [1], can be characterized as 'impairments in reality monitoring or the self-monitoring of internally generated thoughts and actions' [2–4]. A self-monitoring deficit, which manifests as an inability to recognize one's thoughts or actions as their own, may also be usefully applied to the phenomenon of auditory hallucinations (i.e. the inability to recognize internal speech as self-generated) [5]. However, patients with schizophrenia represent a heterogeneous group, conceivably comprising several of attention, memory and executive functions [6]. Thus, one difficulty in assessing the hypothesis that patients with schizophrenia have an impairment in self-monitoring their own thoughts and actions is that the tasks typically used to assess this possibility also tap into the same range of cognitive functions that are impaired in these patients.

One attempt at parsimoniously explaining the range of symptoms and cognitive impairments in patients with schizophrenia suggests that the disorder reflects abnormal functioning in heteromodal association cortices (e.g. temporo-parietal junction (TPJ), prefrontal cortices) [6]. The TPJ and parietal cortex in general represents an integrating area for information in patients with schizophrenia given that it receives multimodal sensory inputs, is crucial for the control of goal directed actions of the limbs and eyes and plays an important role in corporeal awareness [7,8]. Furthermore, the left and right parietal cortices make different contributions to cognition, with the left parietal cortex important for processes of language and praxis, while the right parietal cortex is crucial for updating spatial representations and directing attention to relevant stimuli in the environment (although this is all oversimplification, the basic division of functions has been well demonstrated) (for review see [6]). Previous research has demonstrated impairments in the control of eye movements and covert visual attention in patients with schizophrenia, again suggestive of impairment to parietal lobe function [9].

Parietal and frontal networks play an important role not only in the control and execution of goal-directed actions, but also in the ability to recognize those actions as belonging to oneself. Recent neuroimaging studies, exploring the recognition of actions generated by the self or others, have demonstrated increased activation in parietal and frontal regions known to be crucial for the control of goal-directed actions [10]. Interestingly, when schizophrenic patients with delusions of passivity are asked to distinguish between actions performed by themselves or an 'alien' hand, they misattribute the alien hand as being their own on 80% of trials [11]. Similar misattributions have been observed in cases where the visual feedback of a movement is delayed or perturbed in its path, suggesting that determining the agent of control of a given action is more difficult for patients with schizophrenia [3,4]. The question remains as to whether or not this impairment is due to defective use of visual feedback in these patients or whether a more central deficiency in the ability to plan and monitor goal-directed actions causes these misattributions.
