Selected Poems François Villon, 1978-01 Francois Villon in English Poetry Claire Pascolini-Campbell, 2018 Responses from the nineteenth century onwards to the medieval French poet Medieval Paris paradigmatic poet Francois Villon has long captured the imaginations of creative writers Attracted by his beguilingly pseudo autobiographical literary persona and a body of work that moves seamlessly between bawdy humour bitterness devotion and regret Villon's heirs have been many and varied A veritable poet's poet his oeuvre has appealed to fellow versifiers in particular providing a rich source for translation and imitation This book explores creative responses to

Villon by British and North American poets focusing on translations and imitations of his work by Algernon Swinburne Dante Gabriel Rossetti Ezra Pound Basil Bunting and Robert Lowell They are presented as exemplary of the greater trend of rendering Villon into English transporting the reader from the first verse translations of his work in the nineteenth century to post modern adaptations and parodies of Villon in the twentieth By concentrating on the manner in which individual poets have reacted to Villon and to one another the study unravels multiple layers of poetic relations It argues that the relationships that exist between the translated or imitated texts are collaborative as much as they are competitive establishing a canon of Villon in English poetry whose allusions are not only to the French source but to the parallel corpus of English translations and imitations CLAIRE PASCOLINI CAMPBELL holds degrees in medieval and comparative literatures from the University of St Andrews and University College London The Poems of Master François Villon of Paris François Villon, 1916
