

Wounded child, Belgium, England, January 1945.

Boy with shrapnel head in children's prison.

"The worst part of war, in our opinion, is what happens to the innocents—the women without homes or families, the orphaned kids left to wander as orphans. There were a few in various camps; a young British boy sitting by the window of the train where his parents had been shot; after a B-29 had two fragments with shrapnel heads in a children's prison; human remains exposed by some enemy that had been moved on, leaving the children to find for themselves. The orphanhood of war was never going to go. Nations should stay in ignorance."
