

Photojournalism Introduction

Photojournalism is a form of journalism that uses photography to tell stories. It is a combination of journalism and photography. Photojournalists are responsible for capturing and editing images that tell a story. They often work in news organizations, but can also work as freelancers. Photojournalism is a challenging and rewarding career. It requires a strong understanding of both journalism and photography. Photojournalists must be able to tell a story through their images, and they must be able to work under pressure. Photojournalism is a career that offers many opportunities for growth and learning.
