Citing Online Historical Resources

Version 1.0 | April 2014

Basic Principles

- Online sources are publications.
- They have the same basic elements as printed publications.
- Similar to the written documents we have been using.
- Authorship can be anonymous or known.
- Date of publication.
- Date of most recent update or revision.
- Citation page.
- Author(s), date.
- Title page.
- Other general, replaceable, or permanent identifiers.
- References section, including previous versions, notes, and a bibliography.

Historical documents online follow the same basic principles as other types of historical documents. While some will not have explicit authorship or dates, they will have a date of creation.

- Published online does not change the basic principles.
- Authorship may appear as author.
- References section is provided by linking to previous versions, notes, and a bibliography.
- References will include creators, and publisher information, and may also include other details such as date of last update or any other relevant details.

Using these basic principles, let's look at how to cite online historical resources.
