Historical archaeologists often become so involved in their potsherd patterns they seldom have time or energy left to address the broader processes responsible for the material culture patterns they recognize Some of us have urged our colleagues to use the historical record as a springboard from which to launch hypotheses with which to better understand the behavioral and cultural processes responsible for the archaeological record Too often this urging has resulted in reports designed like a sandwich having a slice of historical background followed by a totally different archaeological record and closed with a weevil ridden slice of interpretation of questionable nutritive value for understanding the past The reader is often left to wonder what the archaeological meat had to do with either slice of bread since the connection between the documented history and the material culture is left to the reader's imagination and the connection between the interpretation and the other disparate parts is tenuous at best. The plethora of stale archaeological sandwiches in the literature has resulted at the methodological level from a too narrow focus on the specific history and archaeology of a site and the individuals involved on it rather than a focus on the explanation of broader processes of culture to which the actors and events at the site-specific level responded.
