Schools of Thought O. Amsterdamska, 2012-12-06 This book is based on the assumption that the development of science has to be understood both as a social and as an intellectual process The division between internal and external history between history of ideas and sociology of science has been harmful not only to our understanding of scientific rationality but also to our understanding of the social processes of scientific development Just as philosophy of science must be informed by its history so also must sociology of science be both historically and philosophically informed Proceeding on this assumption I examine in detail the contents of linguistic ideas and the changes they underwent as well as the institutional processes of disciplinary development and school formation The development of linguistics in the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries has provided me with a convenient locus for a study of the processes of cognitive change and continuity in the context of modern academically institutionalized science This book examines first the idea system and the institutionalization of historical and comparative linguistics in the first half of the nineteenth century and then focusses on the for mation and development of three schools of thought the Neogrammarians the Neo Idealists and the Geneva School of Ferdinand de Saussure

Universal History of Linguistics Esa Itkonen, 1991-12-05 This wide ranging book presents the linguistic achievements of four major cultures to readers presumably conversant with modern theoretical linguistics The chapter on India discusses in detail P n ini s c 400 B C grammar Ast adhy ay i as well as the work of his commentators K ty yana Patanjali and Bhartr hari In the Chinese tradition the Confucian doctrine of the Rectification of Names is singled out for treatment Arabic linguistics is represented by Sibawaihi s d 793 grammar al Kit b in particular its syntax as well as the subsequent commentary tradition The chapter on Europe which is the most comprehensive of the four covers the time span from antiquity to the 20th century special attention is devoted to the contributions of Plato Aristotle the Stoics Varro Apollonius Dyscolus and the Modistae The achievements of the cultures in linguistics are treated throughout from a deliberately value laden point of view The achievements of Western antiquity and the Middle Ages are shown to be much more than the average linguist is inclined to believe Even more importantly it is shown that the Indian and the Arab traditions have been superior to the European tradition at least until the 20th century The fact that a linguistic theory created some 2 400 years ago is fully as adequate as our best theories today must have far reaching implications for the notion of scientific progress More precisely it proves necessary to distinguish between progress in the human sciences and progress in the natural sciences These issues which pertain to the general philosophy of science are treated in the final chapter of the book
