Policing And Stress:

Policing and Stress Heith Copes, 2005 For undergraduate graduate courses in Policing and Criminal Justice Focusing on the topic of police stress this text compiles chapters written by leading police researchers who examine the sources and consequences of stress as well as effective strategies for coping with it Stress and the Police Officer Katherine W. Ellison, 2004 Good policing is not impossible The reactions that have been associated with stressors are not inevitable Many officers retire in good physical and emotional health and 100 back on their careers with pleasure In a situation where stressors have led to maladaptive behavior on the part of individuals or organizations change is called for Change must be constant as social conditions in the world around us vary The police represent a force for the order necessary for society to function It is not an easy job but it is one that is worth doing well Stress and Police Personnel Leonard Territo, Harold J. Vetter, 1981-01-01 This compilation of articles on job related stress in policing addresses the complexities of the stress syndrome among police officers and advocates the incorporation of a stress intervention and management component into police officer training programs The volume is designed for practical use by police officers and administrators Articles are arranged in topical sections and begin with an orientation and introduction to the general subject providing terminology and background to some of the principle psychological physiological and social consequences of stress Job stress and some of its more destructive manifestations in police officers such as alcoholism divorce other family problems and suicide are examined In addition specific and unique stress experienced by women and minorities in law enforcement is also discussed Recommendations are given concerning the most effective ways that both the officer and the law enforcement agency can deal with these problems Articles on stress and the police administrator concern factors in the managerial task and function that contribute to stress Among them are upward mobility with accompanying loss of supportive relationships among colleagues family and friends the risks of decisionmaking with consequences affecting the lives of many people and political pressures in balancing resources against goals and objectives Under the topic of stress and the family articles look at the toll exacted on wives children and relatives of police personnel by the stressful aspects of police work of which the high divorce rate is but the most visible consequence The concluding section presents organizational and individual programs for coping with stress illustrated by stress control and counseling programs available to officers administrators and families in the police departments of Miami Dallas and Chicago A retirement counseling program for police officers is also discussed because of the unique nature of police retirement which occurs early and isolates former officers from agency friends and informal peer groups that have served as a source of personal support Tabular data and endnotes accompany individual articles The appendix contains a listing of police stress training films An index is also supplied Stress and Policing Jennifer M.
