The Political Economy of Agricultural Price Distortions Kym Anderson, 2010-08-30 Despite numerous policy reforms since the 1980s farm product prices remain heavily distorted in both high income and developing countries This book seeks to improve our understanding of why societies adopted these policies and why some but not other countries have undertaken reforms Drawing on recent developments in political economy theories and in the generation of empirical measures of the extent of price distortions the present volume provides both analytical narratives of the historical origins of agricultural protectionism in various parts of the world and a set of political econometric analyses aimed at explaining the patterns of distortions that have emerged over the past five decades These new studies shed much light on the forces affecting incentives and those facing farmers in the course of national and global economic and political development They also show how those distortions might change in the future

Trade, Exchange Rate, and Agricultural Pricing Policies in Chile:

The country study Alberto Valdés, Eugenia Muchnik, Zeballos Hurtado Zeballos H., 1990 The objectives of this study were twofold The first objective was to measure for the 1960-84 period the level of price intervention on agricultural products and the effects it had on output consumption foreign exchange the government budget income transfers between agriculture and the rest of the economy and income distribution The second and ultimate objective was to analyze the political economy of price intervention to understand the interaction between political and economic forces Central to the objectives was the knowledge of what political constraints influenced decisions on agricultural pricing policy as well as to what extent economic constraints on the government and market forces led to pressures on policymakers to alter farm price policies An underlying thesis of this study is that agricultural incentives are strongly affected by developments in other sectors of the economy especially by trade and macroeconomic policies The report is divided into 3 parts Part I presents an overview of the economy and the agricultural sector then gives a descriptive history of agricultural price policies Part II presents the effects of these policies and Part III presents the political economy interpretation of these policies The appendices detail the estimation procedures as well as the basic data used
