

POLITICAL SCIENCE : METHOD AND THEORY

SCIENCE POLITIQUE : MÉTHODES ET THÉORIES

- 70.6239 ABRAJANO, Marisa, et al. — When campaigns call, who answers? Using observational data to enrich our understanding of phone mobilization. Electoral Studies 64, Apr. 2020 : 1-11.

For decades, campaigns have used phone calls to move voters to the polls. Political scientists have made great strides using field experiments to study whether campaign calls effectively increase turnout. However, due in part to limited access to observational data, some of the most basic questions about this mobilization strategy have gone overlooked. We provide a rich descriptive analysis of a novel dataset of millions of campaign phone calls made in California during the 2016 election. We use this dataset to shed light on three important questions: Whom do campaigns call? When campaigns call, who answers? Are those who answer more likely to turn out to vote? Our analysis reveals patterns consistent with previous theories, but also sheds light on new patterns. [R, abr.]

- 70.6240 ACHILOV, Dilshod — Analyzing the nexus of creativity, Islam, and democracy: evidence from Turkey. Mediterranean Politics 25(1), Feb. 2020 : 96-127.

While the relationship between Islam and democracy has received considerable attention in the social science literature, very few studies have explained the dynamics of support for democracy through a micro-level, socio-psychological lens. Applying a novel perspective, this study analyzes the empirical nexus among Islamic religiosity, being open to new ideas and creativity (ONIC), and pro-democratic attitudes to probe the following two questions: Are Muslims who are open to new ideas and think creatively more supportive of democracy than those who are not? Could ONIC be an intervening factor between religiosity and support for democracy? To this end, the paper systematically (1) examines the interrelationship between ONIC and Islamic religiosity; (2) estimates the effects thereof on support for democracy; (3) assesses the mediating potential of ONIC between devoutness and pro-democratic attitudes through an illustrative case of Turkey. The findings indicate that ONIC and Islamic religiosity are not mutually exclusive. [R, abr.]

- 70.6241 ADAM, Zoltan — Re-feudalizing democracy: an approach to authoritarian populism taken from institutional economics. Journal of Institutional Economics 16(1), Feb. 2020 : 105-118.

Political scientists have become concerned with the problem of authoritarian populism, examining how illiberal, anti-pluralist populist parties have degraded liberal democracies. Economic research on recent forms of populism, although also growing, lack a comprehensive conceptual approach. This paper reduces this gap by conceptualizing authoritarian populism in terms of political transaction costs, arguing that its primary function is to vertically integrate political exchange under conditions of general franchise. If successful, authoritarian populist regimes internalize a large share of political transaction costs inherent in decentralized democratic political exchange. This entails a degraded version of democracy, eliminating a significant part of substantial electoral choice. Through weakening impersonal collective political contracting, authoritarian populists bring back private political contracting as a dominant political coordination mechanism, effectively re-feudalizing democracy. [R, abr.]

- 70.6242 AGERBERG, Mattias ; KREFT, Anne-Kathrin — Gendered conflict, gendered outcomes: the politicization of sexual violence and quota adoption. Journal of Conflict Resolution 64(2-3), 2020 : 290-317.

Sexual violence (SV) in conflict is increasingly politicized at both the international and domestic levels. Where SV in conflict is prevalent, we argue international actors perceive gender to be salient and push for a gendered response. Simultaneously, women mobilize politically in response to the threat to their security that conflict-related SV constitutes, making demands for greater representation in politics with the goal of improving societal conditions for themselves. Jointly, we theorize the pressures from above and below push governments in conflict-affected states toward adopting gender policies. We test this theoretical framework in the case of gender quota adoption. We find that states with prevalent wartime SV indeed adopt gender quotas sooner and at higher rates than states experiencing other civil conflicts and than states experiencing no conflict in the same period. [R, abr.]

- 70.6243 AHVENHARJU, Sanna — Potential for a radical policy-shift? The acceptability of strong sustainable consumption governance among elites. Environmental Politics 29(1), 2020 : 134-154.

This empirical small-n case study about the potential for a radical policy shift towards strong consumption governance focuses on the opinions of 21 elite actors in positions of power and influence: members of parliament, interest groups, government, and academia in Finland. The opinions gathered by interviews and a survey focused on the acceptability of an 80% reduction of household natural resource use by 2050, and the acceptability of strong policy measures to realize that goal: quotas, high taxes, and other controversial measures. The results revealed respondents' high awareness of overconsumption, their general willingness to consider new consumption policy measures, and differences in opinions suggesting rifts within the regime. This latent transformation potential and openness to new policies enhances the need for further research, both in terms of policy development and policy acceptability. [R] [See Abstr. 70.6310]

- 70.6244 AJE, Oluwatobi ; CHIDOZIE, Felix — Regional integration and the neo-functional model: the Brexit narrative. Chinese Political Science Review 5(1), March 2020 : 1-12.

The socio-economic and political advantages derived as benefits of the integrative project have been the justification for most integrative initiatives. This has also made regional integration a major phenomenon in international relations, both as a field of study and as a sphere of actual relation. Many theories are paraded in scholarly circles explaining the rationale and process of the integrative project. However, little attention is paid to the fact that, on the continuum of integration, retrogression and disengagement is possible as social realities unfold. Using archival research method, the work examines the relevance of the neo-functional model in explaining recent trends on integration, using Brexit as a case study. It contends that the neo-functional model still holds analytical purchase in approximating contemporary trends of integration. [R]

- 70.6245 ALVEAR, Rafael ; HAKER, Christoph — Kritische Systemtheorie und Kritische Theorie sozialer Systeme. Ein Plädoyer für eine fruchtbare Unterscheidung (Critical system theory and critical theory of social systems. A plea for a fruitful distinction). Leviathan 47(4), 2019 : 488-513.

Systems theory and critical theory are schools of thought that for a long time have been familiar for theorists. During the period of their emergence, there were several theoretical collisions between these two traditions of thinking of society. The meta-reflection that is developed here makes it possible to analyze how these theoretical traditions are connected. As the current discussion is limited to the perspective of systems theory, it is necessary to amplify the debate and to ask for a connection from the perspective of critical theory. Only through the distinction between critical system theory, which is increasingly discussed today, and a critical theory of social systems, which is barely discussed, we may be able to recognize the full productivity of these theoretical collisions. [R, abr.]

- 70.6246 AMAN, Shahida — State building interventions in post Cold War period: a critique of "responsibility to protect" and "humanitarianism". Review of Human Rights 2, Winter 2016 : 87-103.

This paper explores the concepts of humanitarianism and responsibility to protect, which have most influentially guided state-building interventions in the post Cold War period. With more than fifty states intervened in the guise of "responsibility to protect," this paper analyzes why interventionist state-building has developed as a major concern for the international state system. It further delves into the impacts of such interventionist rationale on the nature and functioning of the international state system. It argues the rise of sovereignty as responsibility and humanitarianism challenged the inviolable sovereignty of states by making it conditional on the government's exercise of monopoly over violence within its territory and extension of protection to its citizens against war, crimes, violence and bloodshed. [R, abr.]

- 70.6247 ARCOS RAMÍREZ, Federico — La transformación de la solidaridad en un mundo global (The transformation of solidarity in a global world). Derechos y Libertades 42, Jan. 2020 : 93-124.
