important book investigates under what conditions our beliefs are warranted and the limits of the methods by which we derive them The author is not concerned with validating or debunking any particular worldview religious or scientific but with examining the grounds on which we form the views that we do in fact hold The book s first part discusses the distinction between the views we harbor in our inmost hearts and their extension into the social realm where we encounter a multiplicity of views different from our own In the second part Fezer presents good reasons why we might doubt the beliefs we hold In his third section he discusses methods by which we might form views that are worthy of being called rational The final section covers the differences between science and religion and the limitations inherent in attempts to reconcile competing worldviews Fezer also contributes to the debate around teaching Creationism in schools He makes an argument for limiting the curriculum to accounts of the natural world that do not introduce supernatural principles However Fezer is not anti religion and he discusses both religious and humanistic viewpoints neutrally The author notes that he is attempting to fill a void in university liberal arts curricula As such the book has the structure of a textbook complete with questions for further study in an appendix However it is written in crisp readable prose Readers who aren t intimidated by the textbook style will find a cogent forceful presentation that is likely to challenge his or her convictions in a non threatening and highly impressive manner

Encyclopedia of Sciences and Religions Anne Runehov,Luis Oviedo,2013-05-18 To all who love the God with a 1000 names and respect science In the last quarter century the academic field of Science and Theology Religion has attracted scholars from a wide variety of disciplines The question is which disciplines are attracted and what do these disciplines have to contribute to the debate In order to answer this question the encyclopedia maps the self identified disciplines and religious traditions that participate or might come to participate in the Science and Religion debate This is done by letting each representative of a discipline and tradition answer specific chosen questions They also need to identify the discipline in relation to the Science and Religion debate Understandably representatives of several disciplines and traditions answered in the negative to this question Nevertheless they can still be important for the debate indeed scholars and scientists who work in the field of Science and Theology Religion may need knowledge beyond their own specific discipline Therefore the encyclopedia also includes what are called general entries Such entries may explain specific theories methods and topics The general aim is to provide a starting point for new lines of inquiry It is an invitation for fresh perspectives on the possibilities for engagement between and across sciences again which includes the social and human

The Relations Between Religion and Science Frederick Bishop, 2023-07-27 Those who believe that the creation and government of the world are the work of a Being Whom it is their duty to love with all their hearts Who loves them with a love beyond all other love to Whom they look for guidance now and unending happiness hereafter have a double motive for studying the forms and operations of Nature because over and above whatever they may gain of the purest and highest pleasure in the study and whatever men may gain of material comfort in a thousand forms from the results of the study they cannot but have always present to their minds the thought that all these things are revelations of His character and to know them is in a very real measure to know Him The believer in God if he have the faculty and the opportunity cannot find a more proper employment of time and labour and thought than the study of the ways in which God works and the things which God has made Among religious men we ought to expect to find the most patient the most truth seeking the most courageous of men of science We know that it is not always so and that on the contrary Science and Religion seem very often to be the most determined foes to each other that can be found The scientific man often asserts that he cannot find God in Science and the religious man often asserts that he cannot find Science in God Each often believes himself to be in possession if not of the whole truth at any rate of all the truth that it is most important to possess Science seems to despise religion and religion to fear and condemn Science Religion which certainly ought to put truth at the highest is charged with refusing to acknowledge truth that has been proved And Science which certainly ought to insist on demonstrating every assertion which it makes is charged with giving the rein to the imagination and treating the merest speculations as well established facts

Religion, Science, and Magic Jacob Neusner, Ernest S. Frerichs, Paul Virgil McCracken Flesher, 1989 Every culture makes the distinction between true religion and magic regarding one action and its result as miraculous while rejecting another as the work of the devil Surveying such topics as Babylonian witchcraft Jesus the magician magic in Hasidism and Kabbalah and magic in Anglo Saxon England these ten essays provide a rigorous examination of the history of this distinction in Christianity and Judaism Written by such distinguished scholars as Jacob Neusner Hans Penner Howard Kee Tzvi Abusch Susan R Garrett and Moshe Idel the essays explore a broad range of topics including how certain social groups sort out approved practices and beliefs from those that are disapproved providing fresh insight into how groups define themselves magic as an insider's term for the outsider's religion and the tendency of religious traditions to exclude the magical In addition the collection provides illuminating social cultural and anthropological explanations for the prominence of the magical in certain periods and literatures
