

REPORT HIGHLIGHTS

Our Commitment

Advocates for the English Language Learner program were informed by their year-long research project, an analysis of the school districts and charter schools receiving federal Title I-funded English Language Learner (ELL) services by fiscal year 2010. The Arizona Department of Education (ADE) measures implementation and provides technical assistance to ensure schools meet standards through model programs. Some districts struggle with consistency about the basic services for all students in their care. Other districts could improve their basic implementation, while some districts implement state standards inconsistently and without resources.

June 1 Report No. 1-1-10

English Language Learner Program

The structure of Arizona's English Language Learner (ELL) program is primarily based on federal Title I, Part 1. This is consistent with an ELL Task Force developed models for ELL instruction that school districts and charter schools identified adaptations or none of the models, and that ADE provide technical support and monitor compliance with the state models.

Determining ELL status and assessing student progress—School districts identify ELL students through a home language survey and an English language proficiency test. A student identified as not English proficient is then placed in an ELL program.

ELL students are tested annually to determine progress in becoming proficient in English. After a student is determined proficient, the student is released annually for the following 2 years to monitor whether the student remains proficient and, if not, re-enters an ELL program.

ELL students are those whose native language is not English and who have difficulty reading, writing, speaking, or comprehending English such that it hinders success in the classroom.

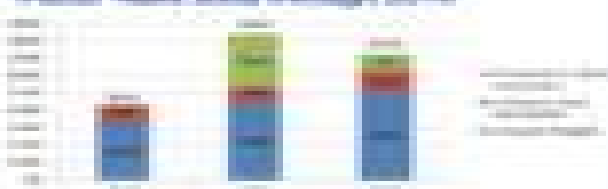

ELL models require a study focus of English language instruction—School districts must use the current English Immersion (EI) model, Structured English (SE) model, or Self-Starting English (SSE) model. These models require students to receive 4 hours of English language development per day in an EI classroom or setting with other ELL students. The models were designed so that ELL students could become proficient in 1 year.

In schools with 20 or fewer ELL students, the district may create individualized language lessons that address both parts of all of the English language instruction according to a district's own classroom setting. Some districts provide a combination of the Structured English instruction.

Fewer ELL students in Arizona—Most Arizona ELL students speak Spanish and are concentrated in the elementary grades. The ELL student population has decreased by 28 percent between fiscal years 2000 and 2010, from about 170,000 to 124,000. The number has declined in this period because ELL students become proficient at higher rates, 55 percent within two years of the program, and there were 25 percent fewer new ELL students.

ELL funding declines then drops along with enrollment—Funding for ELL programs comes from state and federal sources. State funding is based on three funding formulas. The amount spent declined between fiscal years 2000 and 2004 and then dropped along with program enrollment in fiscal year 2010.

State Funding for ELL Programs for ELL Students
Fiscal Years 2000 through 2010

1. The comparatively small fiscal year 2010 budget is based on the number of students who had not become proficient by September 1.
