The Senate of the United States Henry Cabot Lodge, 2015-07-06 Excerpt from The Senate of the United States And Other Essays and Addresses Historical and Literary On the thirtieth day of May 1913 Mr Bryan as Secretary of State made proclamation that the requisite number of States had ratified the amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing that henceforth United States Senators should be elected direct popular vote and not by the legislatures of the different States as established by the Constitution of 1787 This amendment strictly speaking is only a change in the mechanism of election and does not either increase or diminish the powers or essential attributes of the Senate although it will undoubtedly have ultimately a more or less marked effect upon the quality and character of the membership of that body
It is none the less a memorable amendment because while it is the seventeenth which has been adopted since the Constitution went into operation it is the first which in any way touches or affects the Senate of the United States With the single exception of the House of Lords the United States Senate is the oldest upper or second chamber in any great national legislature now in existence Under the provisions of the Constitution framed in 1787 the Senate met for the first time on the
