

CASE STUDY 2

Modeling Using MIKE+

“Low Impact Development” Capabilities of MIKE+

INTRODUCTION

MIKE+ integrates, models, and manages all user water systems in one place for conducting the most comprehensive analyses. MIKE+ allows users to model water distribution, collection systems, river networks, and flooding within a platform that is integrative, flexible, and scalable making it easier to discover patterns, develop predictive modeling, and design more resilient water systems.

MIKE+ is the current and modern version of the very well-known modeling system MOUSE developed in the 1980s, and its successor MIKE+, also employed around the world for several decades. The need for more modern GUI-based workflows, increases in efficiency and computational speed, and improvements in architecture and data management guided the development of MIKE+. The MIKE+ platform integrates 1D–2D hydraulics and hydrodynamics, transport, water quality, and overland flooding in a common data environment and user-focused interface. Applications of MIKE+ can be presented for four distinctive sectors: water distribution, collection systems, river networks, and flooding (each of which may include integration and specific features relevant for model application including infrastructure analysis and management, hydraulic and hydrologic processes, watershed management, operations and real-time controls, and water quality assessment).

A component of the collection systems’ functionality includes an analysis of stormwater controls and specific hydrologic and water quality processes for managing stormwater flows and impacts associated with urban development. A number of available features in MIKE+ deliver the integrated functionality for stormwater management and low impact development (LID) assessment described here.

MIKE+ collection system modeling is based on the national Environmental Protection Agency’s Storm Water Management Model (EPA SWMM) engine or DHI’s integrated multicore MIKE 1D engine, providing access to a range of capabilities central to stormwater management analysis.
