

BHATT (V.V.). Employment and capital formation in underdeveloped economies. Bombay, Orient Longmans, 1960, 127 p.

In this book the author analyzes the problem of underemployment, or as he terms it, the problem of structural involuntary unemployment in the underdeveloped economies and in the process makes a comparative study of capital intensity in the industries of the developed and the underdeveloped economies. The removal of this unemployment, the author maintains, would depend upon the rate of economic development which, in turn, would depend on the economic objectives which the underdeveloped economies seek to attain. If the long-term maximisation of the rate of development be their objective, they could attain full employment within a period of about twelve years; they could, however, attain full employment almost immediately, though with a lower rate of growth, if they chose their production techniques on the basis of the maximisation of income and employment criterion. Their objectives, the author concludes, would determine the type of their investment pattern and production techniques and hence the rate of growth of employment and income. After discussing the mechanics of economic development, the author goes on to discuss its motive power which, in the ultimate analysis, would determine the pace and pattern of development in the underdeveloped economies.

MOORE (Frank W., ed.). Readings in Cross-Cultural Methodology. HRAF Press, New Haven, Conn., U.S.A., 1961, 335 p., $4.75.

Anthropology demands of its disciples encyclopedic knowledge of a sort that one would say became extinct with the passing of the nineteenth century. Although many anthropologists work "in depth" and produce monographs on single societies or even on clusters of traits in such societies, others work in a broader dimension, that of cross-cultural comparison, and it was to assist the latter that the Cross-Cultural Survey was established — to catalogue, cross-index, and translate data from primary sources in anthropology. The idea of such a collection was not new: in 1873, Herbert Spencer undertook the publication of Descriptive Sociology, a series of volumes in which data were assembled, but in interpreted form, while the book format prevented the inclusion of new material. In 1898, Steinmetz recommended the collection of uninterpreted data in catalogue form, and his vision became reality in 1937, when George Murdock and others at the Institute of Human Relations at Yale founded the Cross-Cultural Survey. In 1949, the Survey became the Human Relations Area Files, a cooperative enterprise among more than a dozen participating American universities, to collect, process, and exchange material, indexed according to a series of universal categories, on what now amount to 300 of the nearly 3 000 societies of the world, distributed with regard to geography, and fairly representative of all major types and levels of culture.

Although numerous articles have appeared in various sources on the theory and method of cross-cultural research, no volume completely devoted to this subject had yet been published. This book is a collection of a number of the most significant of such studies; it was produced and bound at the Human Relations Area Files Press, by means of a system of heliography, i.e., photographic reproduction of the documents as they originally appeared. The resulting festival of typography begins with Tylor's pioneer effort of 1889, "Laws of Marriage and Descent", an attempt to discover the frequency of the concurrence

With contributions from over 60 authors from 20 countries, the book is organized into five thematic areas: Review, survey, and critique; Language and languages moving from the periphery to the core; Cross-cultural management research and education; The new international business landscape; Rethinking a multidisciplinary paradigm. Edited by an international team of scholars and featuring contributions from a range of leading cross-cultural management experts, this prestigious volume represents the most comprehensive guide to the development and scope of cross-cultural management as an academic discipline. Readings in Cross-cultural Psychology International Association for Cross-Cultural Psychology, 1974 Readings in Cross-cultural Methodology Frank W. Moore, 1966 Composite work on cross-cultural methodology includes research methods for sociology, anthropology, and ethnography with outlines for comparisons relative to cultural factors and cultural change. Many references. Cross-cultural analysis. Dictionary of Concepts in Cultural Anthropology Robert H. Winthrop, 1991-11-18 The field of cultural anthropology describes and interprets the thought and behavior of contemporary and near-contemporary societies. Inherently pluralistic, it offers a framework in which the distinctive perspectives of each cultural world can be appreciated. Robert Winthrop's dictionary describes the major concepts that have shaped the discipline both historically and theoretically. It sets modern anthropology in its proper context within the broader intellectual tradition. Eighty entries review the key concepts: culture, race, nature, symbolism, adaptation, the primitive, etc., that have established the fundamental problems and issues. Guided research and served as the focus for debate in key areas of the discipline. The entries, which range from 2,000 to 6,000 words in length, are both thorough in treatment and contemporary in relevance. Some entries are primarily of historical significance, while others describe recent developments. Each entry contains an annotated bibliography and a guide to additional reading on the subject. While this is not primarily a technical lexicon, many terms have been glossed and explained.

Designed to be useful to students of anthropology this dictionary will assist those in other disciplines to find their way through the anthropological labyrinth
