Remains of the Soviet Past in Estonia Francisco Martinez, 2018-07-06 What happens to legacies that do not find any continuation In Estonia a new generation that does not remember the socialist era and is open to global influences has grown up As a result the impact of the Soviet memory in people s conventional values is losing its effective power opening new opportunities for repair and revaluation of the past Francisco Martinez brings together a number of sites of interest to explore the vanquishing of the Soviet legacy in Estonia the railway bazaar in Tallinn where concepts such as market and employment take on distinctly different meanings from their Western use Linnahall a grandiose venue whose Soviet heritage now poses difficult questions of how to present the building s history Tallinn s cityscape where the social spatial and temporal co evolution of the city can be viewed and debated Narva a city that marks the border between the Russian Federation NATO and the European Union and represents a place of continual negotiation of belonging and the new Estonian National Museum in Raadi an area on the outskirts of Tartu that has been turned into a memory field The anthropological study of all these places shows that national identity and historical representations can be constructed in relation to waste and disrepair too also demonstrating how we can understand generational change in a material sense Praise for Remains of the Soviet Past in Estonia By adopting the tropes of repair and waste this book innovatively manages to link various material registers from architecture intergenerational relations affect and museums with ways of making the past present Through a rigorous yet transdisciplinary method Martinez brings together different scales and contexts that would often be segregated out In this respect the ethnography unfolds a deep and nuanced analysis providing a useful comparative and insightful account of the processes of repair and waste making in all their material social and ontological dimensions Victor Buchli Professor of Material Culture at UCL This book comprises an endearingly transdisciplinary ethnography of postsocialist material culture and social change in Estonia Mart nez creatively draws on a number of critical and cultural theorists together with additional research on memory and political studies scholarship and the classics of anthropology Grappling concurrently with time and space the book offers a delightfully thick description of the material effects generated by the accelerated post Soviet transformation in Estonia inquiring into the generational specificities in experiencing and relating to the postsocialist condition through the conceptual anchors of wasted legacies and repair This book defies disciplinary boundaries and shows how an attention to material relations and affective infrastructures might reinvigorate political theory Maria M lksoo Senior Lecturer Brussels School of International Studies at the University of Kent expert technical analysis of Russian rock pop and estrada music dovetailing into an illuminating discussion of homosexual men's physical and bodily perceptions of music. He also outlines how popular music performers use song lyrics, drag, physical movements, images of women, sexualized male bodies and other tools and tropes to implicitly or explicitly express sexual orientation through performance. Examining in particular the situation in Tatarstan and Dagestan where there are large Muslim populations, the authors chart the long history of Muslim and orthodox Christian co-existence in Russia, discuss recent moves towards greater autonomy and the assertion of ethnic religious identities which underlie such moves, and consider the actual practice of Islam at the local level, showing the differences between official and unofficial Islam, how ceremonies and rituals are actually observed or not, how Islam is transmitted from one generation to the next, the role of Islamic thought including that of radical sects and Islamic views of men and women's different roles.
