Natural Gas For Vehicles In Canada A Study Of Market Penetration Problems:

Natural Gas for Vehicles in Canada Brian D. Sumner, 1985 From the Executive Summary This report compares the NGV markets in Italy New Zealand the United States and Canada with the emphasis on identifying reasons why natural gas is an attractive fuel for vehicles in Italy and New Zealand while apparently much less so in the U S and Canada Identifying the reasons for low NGV penetration in Canada suggests means by which NGV can be made more competitive with conventional sources of transportation energy The research has indicated that serious obstacles have so far prevented NGV from becoming the fuel of choice for many potential vehicle convertors These include fuel price differential uncertainty high vehicle conversion costs high compression equipment costs tough competition from propane a demonstrated lack of government vehicle conversion commitment a low key marketing effort certain institutional barriers to NGV use and lack of technological developments Canadiana , 1987 Canadian Crude Oil Supply Demand Balances James N. Tanner, Anthony Ernest Reinsch, Canadian Energy Research Institute, 1989 This study examines the existing situation relating to crude oil supply and refined petroleum product demand in Canada and based on reasonable assumptions regarding future energy prices and economic development provides an analysis of likely future paths of crude oil supply demand balances An assessment is conducted of conventional nonconventional and frontier sources of crude oil supply along with an evaluation of the oil megaproject agreements announced in 1988 The supply projections are set against a forecast of Canadian refined petroleum product demand and the resulting light and heavy oil balances are examined An Evaluation of Crude Oil Supply in Saskatchewan James N. Tanner, 1987 The recent volatility of crude oil prices has raised concerns over the volume of oil which can be expected to be discovered in the various supply regions in Canada This study focuses on the likely implication of crude oil volatility on future oil supply from Saskatchewan The study constructed a model to help analyze the effects of price changes on established reserves and also reserve additions from both new discoveries and extensions of older pools The model uses the provincial well data base and research on the royalty rates taxes and operation costs in Saskatchewan to analyze the effects of price changes on established reserves defined as short run supply over a 19 year period The long run analysis includes both current established reserves and reserves which are likely to be discovered in the future Estimated Petroleum Finding Costs in Alberta, 1970-1983 Z. Charles Slagorsky, Janice L. Pasay, 1985 A Peak Load Forecasting Model Case Study K. Morgan Macrae, Canadian Energy Research Institute, 1987 Description of a computer model developed to account for electrical system factors such as demand time of use customer profile and planning horizon and their effects on system peak demand The model tests the impact of electricity price changes on energy consumption and the demand for power by sector Assuming no change in customer class load curves the model is then used to derive a peak load forecast consistent with a long term forecast of customer class energy sales The effects of potential load management programs and customer owned electric power generation in specific sectors are assessed by modifying existing customer class load curves and electricity sales predictions

The Effect of the Western Accord and Recent Provincial

Royalty Changes on Petroleum Industry Capital Expenditures Janice L. Pasay, 1986 This report presents the results of a January 1986 survey of oil and gas companies regarding the impact of the Western Accord and provincial royalty changes introduced in 1985 on their capital expenditure intentions. The results presented here do not represent a forecast of capital expenditures but rather provide an indication of the capital investment intentions of the oil and gas industry prior to the dramatic decline in world oil prices and of how those intentions were influenced by the Western Accord and the provincial government royalty changes.
