Pretty Little Girls And Other Mens Wives:

Wives and Mothers, School Mistresses and Scullery Maids Elizabeth Jane Errington, 1995-09-11 Errington explores evidence of a distinctive women's culture and shows that the work women did constituted a common experience shared by Upper Canadian women. Most of them not only experienced the uncertainties of marriage and the potential dangers of childbirth but also took part in making sure that the needs of their families were met. How women actually fulfilled their numerous responsibilities differed however. Age, location, marital status, class, and society's changing expectations of women all had a direct impact on what was expected of them, what they did, and how they did it. Considering women's work within the social and historical context, Errington shows that the complexity of colonial society cannot be understood unless the roles and work of women in Upper Canada are taken into account. The Atlantic Monthly, 1916 American Woman Suffrage Postcards Kenneth Florey, 2016-04-29 American women's suffrage activists were fascinated with suffrage-themed postcards. They collected them, exchanged them, wrote about them, used them as fundraisers, and organized postcard day campaigns. The cards they produced were imaginative and ideological, advancing arguments for the enfranchisement of women and responding to antisuffrage broadsides. Commercial publishers were also interested in suffrage cards, recognizing their profit potential. Their products though, were reactive rather than proactive, conveying stereotypes they assumed reflected public attitudes, often negative towards the movement. Cataloging approximately 700 examples, this study examines the visual rhetoric of suffrage postcards in the context of the movement itself and as part of the general history of postcards. How to Start Engaging Conversations on Women's, Men's, or Family Studies with Wealthy Strangers Anne Hart, 2007-04-03 Sicilian American Women's Men's and Family Studies Professor, psychoanalyst, and night radio talk show personality Anna Falco's dad always told her that the lower our self-esteem, the more we want to be someone different from ourselves, and the more we want someone different from ourselves. He made a point that the higher our self-esteem, the more we want someone like ourselves. Anna Falco added something more to that: her belief that couples with self-respect will respect each other. Not one of Anna's clients came from families where the husband and wife or child and parent respected one another. That could be one huge reason why family wars grew into world wars. Now family wars had become full-blown race wars in the streets of Los Angeles. Skip an octave and old hatreds of differences fanned flames between the haves and have-nots. She offered to trade the wisdom of age for the energy of youth. But it all boiled down to honor between family members. Anna explained the difference between self-esteem and self-respect. Being an older woman reminded Wrenboy the troubled court-appointed street teen that she had adopted of a mother hen capable of caging his freedom. Her lined face reminded him of his own mortality at a time when he felt invincible and desperately lonely for a loving family. Would he fear her strident voice hammering him back into childhood? Or would he accept her globetrotting to repair the world with kindness? In his search for power and autonomy, he concluded it is easier to rebel. Exhibitors Daily Review, 1925 The Complete Works of Leo
