Abstract: Islam in the history and modernization of the Maldives demonstrates an intrinsic tension, serving both as the foundational cornerstone of national identity and as the source of social conflict and political division. On the one hand, the narrative of being a “100% Muslim nation” has shaped a highly unified national identity, achieving legalization and institutionalization within the power structure and becoming a critical pillar of state legitimacy and social integration. On the other hand, the politicization and homogenization of religion have weakened social inclusivity, exacerbating religious extremism and social tensions in the face of globalization. The Maldivian experience not only reveals how religion undergoes self-transformation through power negotiation and legal reform but also reflects how the tension between traditional religion and the modern state shapes the dynamic framework of national governance. As a microcosm of global religious renaissance and geopolitical interaction, the Maldives offers a vital theoretical perspective and practical insights for understanding the complex interplay among religion, power, and national identity.

1. Introduction

In today’s world, where globalization meets the resurgence of religion, one of the key challenges for modern societies is finding a balance between preserving traditional culture and achieving effective governance (Hovsepian 2023). For small nations deeply rooted in religious traditions, this balance becomes even more significant, as religion often goes beyond being a belief system and plays a central role in shaping national identity and state power (Issa and Yasin 2024).

The Maldives, a small island nation in South Asia known as a “100% Muslim state,” offers a compelling case for examining this dynamic (Pyriard 2010). Since the arrival of Islam in the Maldives in the 12th century, the religion has become more than just a spiritual practice—it has grown into a cultural foundation for national identity and a cornerstone of political legitimacy. On the one hand, Islam has been institutionalized and embedded into official narratives, providing a sense of unity and political stability. On the other hand, the forces of globalization and the renaissance of religious sentiment have given rise to challenges, such as the politicization and even radicalization of religion, which pose risks to social cohesion and national security (Zellman and Malji 2023).

Although previous studies have shed light on the historical influence of Islam and its role in governance, most focus on specific periods or isolated aspects (Forbes 1983; Maniku 1986; Hashemi 2009; Shama 2018; Zahur 2021, 2023a), leaving the broader dual role of
