5.1 Photosynthesis

Overview of photosynthesis

Light dependent reaction is linked to photosynthesis

Light independent reaction is linked to photosynthesis

The light dependent reaction

Photosynthesis is a process by which plants and other organisms use light energy to convert carbon dioxide and water into glucose and oxygen.

The light dependent reaction is the first stage of photosynthesis. It occurs in the thylakoid membranes of the chloroplasts.

During the light dependent reaction, light energy is used to split water molecules into oxygen and hydrogen ions. The oxygen is released as a by-product, and the hydrogen ions are used to form reduced NADP.

The light dependent reaction is linked to the light independent reaction (the Calvin cycle) by the transfer of reduced NADP and ATP.

5.2 Respiration

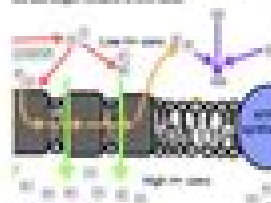

Overview of respiration

Respiration is a process by which organisms release energy from glucose.

The light independent reaction is the second stage of photosynthesis. It occurs in the stroma of the chloroplasts.

During the light independent reaction, carbon dioxide is fixed into a three-carbon compound, which is then reduced to form glucose. This process uses reduced NADP and ATP from the light dependent reaction.

The light independent reaction is linked to the light dependent reaction by the transfer of reduced NADP and ATP.

5.3 The structure and function of the cell

Structure of a cell

The cell is the basic unit of life. It is a structure that contains all the components necessary for life.

The cell is bounded by a cell membrane, which controls the entry and exit of substances.

The cell contains various organelles, including the nucleus, mitochondria, and chloroplasts.

The nucleus contains the genetic material (DNA), which controls the activities of the cell.

Mitochondria are the sites of respiration, where energy is released from glucose.

Chloroplasts are the sites of photosynthesis, where energy is captured from light.

5.4 The control of biological systems

Control of biological systems

Biological systems are controlled by a variety of factors, including hormones, enzymes, and the nervous system.

Hormones are chemical messengers that travel through the bloodstream to target organs, where they regulate their activities.

Enzymes are proteins that speed up chemical reactions in the body. They are highly specific and their activity is regulated by various factors.

The nervous system is a complex system of cells that transmit information throughout the body. It controls the activities of the body in response to changes in the environment.
