Table 2 shows the percentage of employees who completed the self-assessment.

Table 3. EMPLOYEE PARTICIPATION

Summary:
The survey results show that the majority of companies (15 out of 20) have a health promotion program in place. The most common types of programs are health assessment, health education, and health promotion. The most common barriers to participation are lack of time, lack of resources, and lack of employee interest. The most common solutions are to provide more information, to provide more incentives, and to provide more support.

Introduction: The Midwest Business Group on Health (MBGH) is a non-profit, Chicago-based B2B/B2C business coalition. Its members represent over 1.1 large public and private employer organizations and health care stakeholders. MBGH serves as one of the nation's leading employer-focused coalitions and is a recognized leader in offering education, research and community-based activities that increase the value of health benefits and health care services.

Company Wellness Assessment: In 2011 as part of its ongoing effort to recognize employer best practices in health improvement, 22 companies representing a broad range of industries responded to a 44 item self-assessment survey concerning workplace wellness activities and health promotion programming, and to gauge their company. Employers were asked to respond to questions evaluating leadership support, wellness initiatives, programmatic activities, availability of programming, participation, resource allocation, and outcomes measurement.

Assessment Results

Member Descriptions: Companies size ranging from 1,000-25,000, 7 industries: health care, manufacturing, finance and insurance, retail trade, wholesaler trade, professional, scientific and technical services, and other services. (See Table 1).

Programming: The most prominent results showed that the duration of programming ranged from 3-5 years and was provided by vendors, health plans and employers. Companies used leadership support for health program initiatives (i.e. for MBGH) (See Table 2). A substantial significant rate of employee engagement and participation was reported (See Figure 1). Employees participating in health programming ranged over a 24 month period (including health risk assessment/health completion) (See Table 3). Biometric screening and feedback was a key feature of most health programs (See Table 4). Reducing weight and lowering the effects of metabolic conditions were important for companies with stress management for employees.

Barriers to Employee Engagement: Time to participate, privacy concerns, availability of programming, internal communication effectiveness, perceived low levels of leadership engagement and employee behavioral reinforcement.

Conclusion: Table 1 demonstrates leadership support is positive and is consistent with evidence showing a positive of implementation across workplace wellness programming (Frank & Linn, 2008). The programming rate (See Table 1 & 4) of employee completion of biometric screening with feedback is consistent with the 2010 Flu gateway to improved employee participation, engagement and health outcomes (Cohen et al., 2010). Companies measuring and providing feedback to employees is also the "three-year success" concept (Frank & Linn, 2008). Table 3 shows reported barriers to employee participation and suggests solutions companies could make to increase employee participation and engagement. A study conducted for better at a 2010 evaluated participation in an employee wellness program (Frank & Linn, 2008) and found similar barriers to participation in health programming and suggested the solutions suggested. Companies have scope for growth in health culture development, employee engagement and program integration. Figure 1 shows the company's relationship with employee engagement with program content, printing, implementation and evaluation, however, complexity of support, delivery and evaluation should be considered as a regular occurrence given the nature of the health and business outcomes targeted for improvement (Frank et al., 2010). This sample of companies are using best practice solutions by (Frank et al., 2010), these include but are not limited to leadership and management commitment, diverse program offerings, multi-channel and multi-level approaches.

Future Directions: the assessment (i) companies should conduct an annual organizational self-assessment and benchmarking process against the national Worksite Health Promotion Survey (Linn et al., 2008) and other members of the MBGH; (ii) identify the strategic business initiatives with employee health needs and (iii) consolidate their efforts in increasing employee participation and engagement.

The figure shows the percentage of employees who completed the self-assessment by company size. The x-axis represents company size (1-20) and the y-axis represents the percentage of employees (0-100%). The chart shows that the percentage of employees who completed the self-assessment generally increases with company size, with a notable peak for company 10 at approximately 90%.

Table 4. BIOMETRIC SCREENING PARTICIPATION
