

INTRODUCTION

Demand is an economic term that refers to the amount of products or services that consumers wish to purchase at any given price level. The mere desire of a consumer for a product is not demand. Demand includes the purchasing power of the consumer to acquire a given product at a given period. In other words, it's the amount of product or services that consumers are willing and able to purchase. Demand is desire backed by willingness to pay and ability to pay i.e. a wish to have a commodity does not become demand. A person wishing to have a commodity should be willing to pay for it and should have ability to pay for it. Thus, a desire becomes demand if it is backed by willingness to pay and ability to pay. Demand is meaningless unless it is stated with reference to a price.

Demand is the quantity of a good that consumers are willing and able to purchase at various prices during a given period of time.¹ The relationship between price and quantity demanded is also known as demand curve. Preferences and choices, which underlie demand, can be represented as functions of cost, benefit, odds and another variable. People demand goods and services in an economy to satisfy their wants. All goods and services have wants satisfying capacity which is known as "UTILITY" in economics. Utility is highly subjective concept, it is different from person to person. Utility is measured by the means of introspection. By demand for goods and services economists essentially mean in willingness as well as ability of the consumer in procuring and consuming the goods and services. Thus, demand for a commodity or service is dependent upon

- (a) its utility to satisfy want or desire.
- (b) capability of the prospective consumer to pay for a good or service.

Conceptually, demand is nothing but consumer's readiness to satisfy desire by paying for goods and services. A desire accompanied by ability and willingness to pay makes a real or effective demand.

LAW OF DEMAND

The law of demand states that, conditional on all else being equal, as the price of good increases, quantity demanded decreases; conversely, as the price of a good decreases, quantity demanded increases. In the other words, the law of demand describes an inverse relationship between price and quantity demanded of a good. Alternatively, other things being constant, quantity demanded of a commodity. For example, a consumer, may demand 2 kilograms of apples at Rs 70 per kg; he may, however, demand 1 kg if the price rises to Rs 80 per kg. This has been the general human behaviour on relationship between the price of the commodity and the quantity demanded. The factors held constant refers to other determinants of demand, such as the prices
