Abstract

Since the return of democracy in 1990, party identification has been declining steadily among the Chilean public. Very few studies have attempted to understand this process in a longitudinal perspective. We address this gap by studying the evolution of mass level partisanship through an age-period-cohort analysis applied to repeated cross sectional data from 1994 to 2014. Results from Bayesian random intercept models indicate the presence of significant and negative effects associated to all three elements of social change. First, strong period effects have shrunked the overall level of partisan identification, though with some noticeable setbacks during election years. Second, pronounced aging effects have reduced individuals' propensity to identify with a party as they become older. Lastly, we find significant cohort effects whereby each successive generation is less partisan. Consequently, the effects of all three sources of change have consistently pointed in the direction of extinguishing mass partisanship from Chilean society.

1 Introduction

During the last decades several Latin American countries experienced dramatic dealignment processes whereby significant portions of the population ceased to support or affiliate with any of the existing political parties (Lupu, 2014a; Morgan, 2007). Within the region, Chilean society stands out as one in which these processes adopted its sharpest form. Indeed, according to national surveys, while in 1994 more than 73% of the Chilean adult population mentioned to identify or sympathize with a political party, in 2014 this figure dropped to 32%.¹ Similarly, the proportion of the public that mentioned to identify or sympathize with one of the political coalitions decreased more than 30 percentage points from 71% 1994 to 40% in 2013. While there certainly are some years where the aggregate levels of identification recover, particularly during election years, the indisputable trend is one of decline. As a result of this brake down of mass partisanship, Chile
