Prevention of Reflective Cracking in Pavements A. Vanelstraete, L. Francken, 2004-06-02 Crack reflection through a road structure is one of the main causes of premature pavement deterioration. This is a widespread problem in many countries and highway maintenance authorities are having to find economic means of repairing and upgrading their pavements. This book is the eagerly awaited state of the art report which considers all different aspects of the subject including assessment and use of overlay systems.

Cost Effective Prevention of Reflective Cracking in Composite Pavements Mostafa A. Elseifi, 2008 Reflection cracks are caused by discontinuities cracks or joints in underlying layers which propagate through a hot mix asphalt HMA overlay due to continuous movement at the crack prompted by thermal and traffic loading. If the new overlay is bonded to the distressed layer cracks in the existing pavement usually propagate to the surface within one to five years and even as early as few months have been reported. Excessive seasonal temperature variations and movements of a cement treated base layer may also result in shrinkage cracking which extends to the pavement surface to cause reflection block cracks. Reflection cracking leads to premature failure of overlays by allowing water infiltration through the cracks which cause stripping in HMA layers and weakening and deterioration of the base and or subgrade. Since the early 1930s considerable resources and efforts have been spent to find new and relatively inexpensive techniques to delay reflection cracking. Different methods including the use of interlayer systems e.g. glassgrid stress absorbing membranes paving fabrics etc and rubblization have been suggested for enhancing pavement resistance to reflective cracking. Experimental investigations of these crack control treatments indicate that their performances have been mixed and cannot be considered conclusive. Louisiana has experience with various techniques and treatments to control reflection cracking since the 1970s however the cost effectiveness and performance of these methods have not been reliably evaluated. In addition scientific evaluation and testing of these treatment methods was not performed on many projects. To ensure successful control of this distress and effective allocation of maintenance funds there is a critical need to assess the performance of pavement sections across the state built with various treatment methods and to determine the most cost effective techniques to delay or to prevent reflection cracking in composite pavements.

Reflective Cracking in Pavements J.M. Rigo, R. Degeimbre, L. Francken, 2014-04-21 This book forms the Proceedings of the Second International RILEM Conference held in Liege in March 1993. It follows the successful first conference held in 1989 and focusses on two main topics: the current state of the art of reflective cracking in highway and other pavements and design recommendations for field applications. As well as more than 50 international contributions on individual projects a series of keynote papers are included

Reflection of cracks in hot mix asphalt HMA overlays represents a serious challenge associated with pavement rehabilitation Since the early 1930s considerable resources and efforts have been spent to find new and relatively inexpensive techniques to delay reflection cracking Different methods including the use of interlayer systems have been suggested for enhancing pavement resistance to reflection cracking Experimental investigations in the early 1980s showed that interlayer systems might be used to delay or to prevent the reflection of cracks through a new overlay placed over an old cracked pavement Louisiana experimented with various techniques and treatments to control reflection cracking since the 1970s however the performance and cost effectiveness of these methods were not evaluated in many projects Performance and economical assessments of these various treatment methods present a critical need to ensure successful control of this distress and effective use of available funds Therefore it is necessary to analyze various pavements across the state in which these treatments were used to establish the performance and cost effectiveness of these crack control methods
