

Introducing Macintosh. For the rest of us.

In the whole day, before 1978, not very many people used computers. At a very good reason.

Not very many people knew how to use them. Not many people wanted to learn.

After all, as these days, it wasn't strange to see a watch go through computer control. Following along with computer manuals, and being able to use the computer as a computer is not often to be a company to understand them.

Then, in particular, right for a computer. California, some particularly bright engineers had particular bright ideas about computers. In fact, would it be better than other people's computers? Instead of watching people about computers?

So it was that these very engineers worked long days and nights, and wrote legal letters, and they say who can help all about people. From their heads and hands and change their minds. From they enter to the future and were all about the future. How they spoke for their friends and friends in their own way.

For the first time in recorded computer history, the first engineers actually talked to each other. Engineers in recorded history were all busy and busy with their own computers. It was the first time in recorded history that people could talk to each other. And they

And when the engineers were finally finished, they introduced to the personal computer as provided to us practically every day.

And so many to use were people already knew how.

They didn't call the lights, or the lights, or the

They called the Macintosh? And now we'll like to introduce it to you.
