Researchers estimate that 10 percent of all people have a genetic predisposition to osteoporosis, a bone-weakening condition that typically develops later in life. In a study published in the Journal of Bone and Mineral Research, researchers from the University of California, San Francisco, and the University of Washington, Seattle, found that people with a family history of osteoporosis had a 50 percent higher risk of developing the disease themselves. The researchers also found that people with a family history of osteoporosis had a 50 percent higher risk of developing the disease themselves. The researchers also found that people with a family history of osteoporosis had a 50 percent higher risk of developing the disease themselves.
