Navigating Institutional Fragmentation: Mainstreaming Climate Change Policy in Malaysia's Multi-Level Governance System

Executive Summary

Mainstreaming climate change policy faces institutional fragmentation issues. The conventional approach to combating climate change typically involves top-down, centralised decision-making and implementation, often led by national governments. Climate change has multifaceted complexities and cross-sectoral issues that require a multi-scale approach to the provisioning of plans and strategies. The National Policy on Climate Change (NPCC) 2009 is an important document for Malaysia to promote low-carbon growth in response to climate change challenges. The NPCC outlines strategies and actions to mitigate greenhouse gas emissions, adapt to climate change impacts, and promote sustainable development. Nevertheless, the mainstream climate change policy implementation is rather unclear.

This policy brief identifies distinctive features of mainstreaming climate change policies within Malaysia's multi-level government system, the mitigation and adaptation strategy using situation analysis. The process includes the horizontal and vertical dimension analysis of development planning governance. Further, it draws out their relevance to the clear framework of multi-level climate governance within the Malaysian context of planning governance and the city-level practical implementation. Despite the absence of the Climate Change Act, the existing Malaysia's multi-tier government system accommodates the mainstreaming of climate change policy in Malaysia. The horizontal dimension of the mainstreaming climate change policy manifested in various sectoral laws and regulations and institutional frameworks. The vertical dimension of mainstreaming integrates into ongoing development evident in NPP 3 (2016 – 2020), NPP 4 (2021 – 2025), state structure and local plan known as an integrative approach. Town and Country Planning Act of 1976 empowers a three-tier government system for development planning allowing a more structured approach in accommodating the existing low-carbon cities framework as a national-driven initiative.

Despite the slow response of the state in response to NPP, some bottom-up initiatives were found at the regional level, Iskandar Malaysia and several cities. Hence, a clearer policy framework is needed to set a legally binding target. This framework requires a new governance structure that accommodates the existing Town and Country Planning Act 1976 that already governs the development planning system. Interpreting a low-carbon strategy is crucial for achieving net-zero carbon. NPP integration into state and local plans enhances low-carbon strategy.

Cohesion Policy and Multi-level Governance in South East Europe Ian Bache, George Andreou, 2013-09-13 This book considers the extent to which EU cohesion policy and related pre accession instruments are contributing to the development of more compound polities in south east Europe and specifically promoting multi level governance In this respect there are two points of departure the first is the argument that the EU is a highly compound polity that tends to pull member and candidate states in this direction the second is the considerable literature that links EU cohesion policy to the promotion of multi level governance Following this we have chosen a range of south east European states whose period of engagement with the EU generally differs Greece Slovenia Bulgaria Romania Croatia F Y R Macedonia and Turkey The case studies reveal that EU cohesion policy has created more compound polities but that system wide multi level governance remains weak and central governments are still prominent However there are interesting and potentially important developments in relation to particular features of multi level governance not least in states whose engagement with the EU in this sphere is relatively new This book was published as a special issue of Southeast European and Black Sea Studies

European Regulation of Medical Devices and Pharmaceuticals Nupur Chowdhury,2014-04-29 One of the primary functions of law is to ensure that the legal structure governing all social relations is predictable coherent consistent and applicable Taken together these characteristics of law are referred to as legal certainty In traditional approaches to legal certainty law is regarded as a hierarchical system of rules characterized by stability clarity uniformity calculable enforcement publicity and predictability However the current reality is that national legal systems no longer operate in isolation but within a multilevel legal order wherein norms created at both the international and regional level are directly applicable to national legal systems Also norm creation is no longer the exclusive prerogative of public officials of the state private actors have an increasing influence on norm creation as well Social scientists have referred to this phenomenon of interacting and overlapping competences as multilevel governance Only recently have legal scholars focused attention on the increasing interconnectedness and therefore the concomitant loss of primacy of national legal orders between the global European and national regulatory spheres through the concept of multilevel regulation In this project the author uses multilevel regulation as a term to characterize a regulatory space in which the process of rule making rule enforcement and rule adjudication the regulatory lifecycle is dispersed across more than one administrative or territorial level and amongst several different actors both public and private The author draws on the concept of a regulatory space using it as a framing device to differentiate between specific aspects of policy fields The relationship between actors in such a space is non hierarchical and they may be independent of each other The lack of central ordering of the regulatory lifecycle within this regulatory space is the most important feature of such a space The implications of multilevel regulation for the notion of legal certainty have attracted limited attention from scholars and the demand for legal certainty in regulatory practice is still a puzzle The book explores the idea of legal certainty in terms of the perceptions and expectations of regulatees in the context of medical products specifically pharmaceuticals and medical devices which can be differentiated as two regulatory spaces and therefore form two case studies As an exploratory project the book necessarily explores new territory in terms of investigating legal certainty first in terms of regulatee perceptions and expectations and second because it studies it in the context of multilevel regulation

Europeanisation and Renationalisation Anne Jenichen,Ulrike Liebert,2019-07-15 The book explores how the European Union and its members have been renegotiating Europeanisation and renationalization in response to the multiple crises they faced over recent years The authors highlight varying understandings of crises in different national and supranational policy and institutional contexts They show how in some cases these have challenged the legitimacy of European Union norms and institutions and even triggered disintegration while in others these crises have served as sources of inspiration for European social innovation and political development
