Multiple Conflicts Over Multiple Uses:

Conflicts on Multiple-use Trails Roger L. Moore,1994 Multiple Uses of Water in Irrigated Areas Margaretha Bakker,International Water Management Institute,1999 Water is being transferred out of agriculture to meet the growing demand in other areas often without an agreement of or compensation to farmers with irrigated land and water rights Furthermore there is a failure to recognize that irrigation systems supply water not only for the main fields but also for domestic uses home gardens trees and other permanent vegetation and livestock Other productive uses include fishing harvesting of aquatic plants and animals and a variety of other enterprises such as brick making In addition irrigation systems can have a positive or negative effect on wildlife habitats Thus the withdrawal of water affects the rural household rural economy and the environment in a number of ways This paper argues that to ensure efficient equitable and sustainable water use to reduce poverty and improve the well being of the community irrigation and water resources policies need to take into account all uses and users of water within the irrigation system The multiple uses of water in the Kirindi Oya irrigation system are examined in this paper An interdisciplinary group of scientists have investigated a number of areas including water accounting water quality household water use the valuing of water for alternative uses and the complementarities competition and conflicts among uses and users Environmental Politics and Policy Walter A.

The United States Forest Service perhaps more than any other federal agency has made great strides during the past two decades revolutionizing its public involvement efforts and reshaping its profile through the hiring of professionals in many disciplinary areas long absent in the agency In fact to a large extent the agency has been doing precisely what everyone has been clamoring for it to do involving the public more in its decisions hiring more wildlife biologists recreation specialists sociologists planners and individuals with people skills and furthermore taking a more comprehensive and long term view in planning the future of the national forests The result has been significant in some ways monumental changes in the agency and its land management practices There are provisions for public input in almost all aspects of national forest management today The professional disciplines represented throughout the agency's ranks are markedly more diverse than they have ever been Moreover no stone is left unturned in the agency's current forest planning effort undoubtedly the most comprehensive interdisciplinary planning effort ever undertaken by a resource agency in the United States Regardless of the dramatic change that has occurred in the U S Forest Service since the early 1970s the agency is still plagued by conflicts arising from dissatisfaction with how it is doing business
