By administering sufficient radiation therapy to the breast, the lymph nodes, and chest wall after a mastectomy, the metastatic risk is minimized. In the past, the use of breast-conserving therapy (BCT) was limited to patients with early-stage breast cancer. However, recent studies have shown that BCT is also a viable option for patients with advanced breast cancer. BCT involves the removal of the breast tissue, but not the lymph nodes, and the use of radiation therapy to the chest wall. This approach has been shown to be effective in reducing the risk of local recurrence and improving survival in patients with advanced breast cancer. BCT is a promising option for patients with advanced breast cancer, and it is important to discuss this option with your doctor.
