Abstract: This study examined the difficulties and challenges faced by secondary school teachers in teaching English language. The objectives of this research study is to ascertain the availability of resources for teaching English at secondary level, to find out the problems faced by teachers in teaching English language at secondary level and to explore the pedagogy employed by teachers in teaching English language at secondary level. The study adopted the descriptive survey research. The sampling of the study was selected through random sampling in which 120 English language teachers have been selected from 60 schools. The tools and the techniques used were questionnaires in order to collect data and the statistical technique applied was frequency and percentage. The result of the study indicates that 80% of the teachers facing difficulty in teaching English language in the classroom. They are unable to use the English language extensively while teaching the content of English subject due to the low competencies of pupils in language and much usage of the local language, due to this students lack motivation and interests in learning English language. There is lack of audio aids and visual aids for teaching English in schools, also students did not have the habit of reading an English newspaper daily. Most of the teachers are given more emphasis on the content of the subject whereas very less is focusing on the structure, grammar and vocabulary. There are lack of training skills in improving the speaking abilities and competencies.

1. Introduction

One of the most significant languages in the world is regarded as English. The importance of English can be attributed to various factors. The fact that English is a common first language in many nations is one of the causes. There are 104 nations where English is the native tongue. People use English for commerce and travel even in nations where it is not the national tongue. In most nations, English is utilized for these purposes. The primary corporate dialect is English. The United Nations' primary dialect is English. The primary language of airports and airlines is English. All flight attendants who fly internationally are required to speak English. English comes in a variety of varieties, including British English, Canadian English, and American English. These are not different tongues. It's a dialect. The way locals speak their original tongue is known as a dialect. People may have a favorite term they prefer to utilize for a particular thing in one place but not in another. For instance, the structure where a movie is being shown is referred to as a cinema in Britain. It is referred to as a theater in America. This is merely a new method of expressing the same idea. Both the terms "cinema" and "theatre," which are both English words that can be used to describe a structure where motion pictures are viewed, are appropriate. It's crucial to keep in mind that any style of English you learn is beneficial. There is no superior English translation. Only distinct ones exist.

According to some, English is the language with the greatest importance in the world and has both communicative and educational value. As the "Lingua Franca" of all nations or the language used for the convenience of the world, it is one of the most widely spoken languages in use today. The majority of the world's knowledge is thought to be preserved in English. "The biggest proportion of inhabitants in the entire globe is proficient in English for historical, political, and economic reasons," (Doctor K. T. Bhatia). The majority of software and computer operating systems are now written in English thanks to the IT Revolution. English is well known for its expressiveness as well as for its extensive and varied literature. In a welcome poem for a world conference by the Australian poet Peter Porter, which came out in the Times Literary Supplement on February 28, 1992, it is given as follows:

"Everything will be exposed in English so, delegates and lovers understand"
