The Governance of Climate Change Adaptation in Developing Countries: The Case of National Disaster Management in Bangladesh and Pakistan in Comparative Perspective Tina Peissker,2013-06-01 The prospect of the adverse effects that global climate change will have on human societies opened up a discourse about the way adaptation should be managed In order to finance adaptation measures in the most severe affected countries the parties of the Kyoto Protocol established the Adaptation Fund in 2007 In view of the limited resources that are available for adaptation scales for the prioritization of countries that are based on their suspected vulnerability have been developed in literature But so far indicators of vulnerability reflect only the general indicators of human development and therefore fail to capture the complex structures of vulnerability In order to capture the mentioned complexity in a more satisfactory way this book highlights the theory of collective learning The Aid Paradoxes in Afghanistan Nematullah Bizhan, 2017-08-14 The relationship between aid and state building is highly complex and the effects of aid on weak states depend on donors interests aid modalities and the recipient's pre-existing institutional and socio-political conditions. This book argues that in the case of Afghanistan, the country inherited conditions that were not favourable for effective state building. Although some of the problems that emerged in the post-2001 state building process were predictable, the types of interventions that occurred, including an aid architecture which largely bypassed the state, the subordination of state building to the war on terror, and the short horizon policy choices of donors and the Afghan government, reduced the effectiveness of the aid and undermined effective state building. By examining how foreign aid affected state building in Afghanistan since the US militarily intervened in Afghanistan in late 2001 until the end of President Hamid Karzai's first term in 2009, this book reveals the dynamic and complex relations between the Afghan government and foreign donors in their efforts to rebuild state institutions. The work explores three key areas: how donors supported government reforms to improve the taxation system; how government reorganized the state's fiscal management system; and how aid dependency and aid distribution outside the government budget affected interactions between state and society. Given that external revenue in the form of tribute, subsidies, and aid has shaped the characteristics of the state in Afghanistan since the mid-eighteenth century, this book situates state building in a historical context. This book will be invaluable for practitioners and anyone studying political economy, state building, international development, and the politics of foreign aid.
