
Contemporary Greedy Institutions: An Essay on Lewis Coser's Concept in the Era of the 'Hive Mind'

MARIANNE EGGER DE CAMPO*
Berlin School of Economics and Law

Abstract: Lewis Coser perennially discussed various forms and facets of 'greedy institutions' with their total grasp on the individual. Coser's 'greedy institutions' demand undivided time and loyalty from the individual who will voluntarily devote him/herself for exclusive benefits only granted to loyal followers. Although the ancient authorities have vanished—princes with their court Jews, masters with their servants, or religious and political missionaries—one can argue that the idea of the greedy institution is far from obsolete today. Management consultants, 24/7 old-age carers from Eastern Europe and particularly the 'hive mind' of new social media show that a revisiting of Coser's theory can help in understanding modern forms of greed in institutions. This awareness may enhance vigilance against intrusions into personal autonomy.

Keywords: greedy institutions, Lewis Coser, new media, 24/7 migrant carers, spin doctors, consultants, power relations

One concept that incessantly occupied Lewis Coser's as well as Rose Laub Coser's [Coser 1999] critical thinking was the allegiance claimed by the individual in relations of power. He analysed the relations between sectarians and sects as early as in the 1950s [Coser 1954], and the relation between a powerful ruler and his eunuchs [Coser 1964] or court Jews [Coser 1972]. Further, he compared celibacy in the Catholic Church with the claim for complex marriage in the utopian communities of the late 18th and the 19th century in the United States [Coser 1967]. In another bold comparison, Coser analysed the similarities between Jesuits and Leninists in terms of their relations to the collective [Coser 1973b] and (prematurely) predicted the obsolescence of the occupational role of the domestic servant [Coser 1973a]. A shared trait of these obviously very diverse phenomena is, by and large, the lack of external coercion and the unlimited claim made on all of the individual's cathectical (i.e. mental and emotional) energy.
