The Poets of the Future Henry T. Schneidtkind, 2017-02-09 Excerpt from The Poets of the Future A College Anthology for 1917 1918 Poetry therefore has suffered a relapse during the war If however we realize the aims for which this country has entered the war and for which men like Francis F Hogan have laid down their lives then the loss for poetry will have proved an incalculable gain For poetry is emotion either remembered or anticipated just as all literature is an expression of the human longing for something greater something more beautiful than the present In proportion as we get nearer to the ideal for which we aim literature becomes less necessary I can conceive of a stage of human development where literature would be useless since the sheer joy of living would be more intense than the mental conception of the greatest artist The lyric poem which a mother experiences at the first word that falls from her baby's lips is greater than any poem that has ever been committed to writing So too the poem of a human life lived in a community which has attained its aims is far greater than any written poem That such a life may be possible for all people the true poets the

Mysticism in Postmodernist Long Poems Joe Moffett, 2014-10-28 Written from a literary critic's perspective Mysticism in Postmodernist Long Poems borrows insights from Religious Studies and critical theory to examine the role of spirituality in contemporary poetry specifically the genre of the long poem Descending from Whitman's Song of Myself the long poem is often considered the American twentieth century equivalent of the epic poem but unlike the epic it carries few generic expectations aside from the fact that it simply must be long This makes the form particularly pliable as a tool for spiritual inquiry The period following World War II is often described as a secular age but spirituality continued as a concern for poets as evidenced by this study These writers look beyond conventional faith systems and instead seek individual paths of understanding they engage in mysticism in other words With chapters on H D and Brenda Hillman Robert Duncan James Merrill Charles Wright and Galway Kinnell and Gary Snyder this study demonstrates how these poets engage the culture of consumption in the postwar years at the same time they search for opportunities for transcendence Not content to throw over the earthly in favor of the otherworldly these poets reject the familiar binary of the worldly and metaphysical to produce distinctive paths of spiritual understanding that fuel what Wright calls a contemplation of the divine
