Bartholomew the Portuguese

It was not until Australia and New Guinea were separated by a strait was about 100 miles wide in the middle of the continent, but in fact the strait is more than 10 degrees wide.

It is likely that if some unknown seaman did visit Australia by chance rather than by design, he would have found it as a new world. On the other hand, there is some evidence that during the 15th century three expeditions set out from the coast of Portugal, in search of the southern continent.

The first expedition, comprising two ships, under the command of Vasco da Gama, sailed from Calicut in 1497. It was not until 1498 that it became known that the southern continent was not where it was supposed to be.
