Literature is the mirror of society

Published: February 24, 2008 09:12

By Mansel Blackford, Staff Reporter

Mansel Blackford speaks with students and professors about the impact of literature on today's youth.

When was the last time you opened a book? And what are you doing about your education textbooks - a real book, which has gotten you caught into the world? For many university students, it's been a while, perhaps as far back as high school years in high school.

Literature has had a major impact on the development of society. It has shaped civilizations, changed political systems and inspired human life. Literature goes to a defined picture of human experiences, allowing us to connect our lives with others and ourselves.

However, just as it has constructed societies, the writings and works of certain authors have degraded societies to their most primitive form.

The UAE is only 30 years old. As a country that is still undergoing rapid development, the primary impact of literature is undeniable. All educated youth, which holds the future of the nation, is the result of the impact of literature.

"The foundation of every state is the education of its youth," said Karia Norton, assistant professor of English at the American University in Dubai. "The youth should be educated in the great ideas of not only its own culture and time, but other cultures and times as well."

Notes: Answer the guided reading questions to the best of your ability. For each question, be sure to provide textual evidence to support your answer.

Editor: What is the author's opinion of the status or importance of a textbook vs. literature?
