

Reproductive Coercion by an Intimate Partner: Occurrence, Associations, and Interference with Sexual Health Decision Making

Jonel Thaller and Jill Theresa Messing

Reproductive coercion is a form of intimate partner violence (IPV) in which a variety of tactics can be used to force pregnancy on an intimate partner. This study investigated the occurrence of male-perpetrated reproductive coercion, its relationship to other forms of IPV, and interference with women's sexual health decision making. Two data sets were collected, by conducting client-practitioner screenings ($n = 2,108$) and anonymous surveys ($n = 84$), from women seeking reproductive health services in a southwestern state and analyzed separately. Prevalence and correlates of reproductive coercion varied according to data-collection method, indicating that behaviorally based screening tools and anonymous screening may increase disclosure rates. In the screening sample, reproductive coercion was associated with forced sex, threats of physical harm, and verbal abuse. In the survey sample, reproductive coercion was associated with being nonwhite, fear of asking one's partner to use a condom, and fear of refusing sex. Social workers should be aware that reproductive coercion is a form of coercive control that may be associated with increased fear and IPV and may interfere with sexual health decision making; however, disclosure of reproductive coercion or IPV is not necessary for intervention. The article concludes with a discussion of screening and intervention strategies.

KEY WORDS: domestic violence; family planning; intimate partner violence; reproductive health; screenings Globally, approximately 30 percent of women over the age of 15 have experienced physical or sexual violence from an intimate partner (Devries et al., 2013). Likewise, in the United States, recent estimates indicate that approximately one in three women over the age of 18 have experienced physical or sexual violence or stalking from an intimate partner at some point in their lifetime (Black et al., 2011). IPV results in a multitude of negative physical and mental health consequences, with women reporting injury, chronic fatigue, headaches, gastrointestinal problems, and gynecological problems, as well as depression, suicide or suicidal ideation, shame, and posttraumatic stress disorder (Campbell, 2002; Golding, 1999). In part due to these negative health and mental health consequences, it is likely that social workers—particularly those in health care settings—will come into contact with women who are experiencing IPV. Though studies have found that women are more likely to seek assistance for IPV from friends and family members than formal service providers (Goodkind, Sullivan, & Bybee, 2004; Martin, Houston, Mmari, & Decker, 2012), universal screening can be useful in identifying and intervening in IPV (Thackeray, Stelzner, Downs, & Miller, 2007; Trabold, 2007).

The association between IPV and unintended pregnancy has been well documented (see, for example, Coker, 2007; Gee, Nandita, Wan, Chavkin, & Long, 2009; Miller et al., 2011; Pallitto, Campbell, & O'Campo, 2005; Williams, Larsen, & McCloskey, 2008). However, little is known about the mechanisms underlying this association. Limited control of sexual health decision making appears to be a factor, and recent studies have investigated the prevalence and correlates of reproductive coercion, defined as when a male partner attempts to get his female partner pregnant when she does not want to be (see, for example, Miller et al., 2010; Moore, Frohwirth, & Miller, 2010). This exploratory study reports on data collected through two approaches: (1) a screening conducted by health care providers and (2) a survey conducted by researchers to (a) investigate the occurrence of male-perpetrated reproductive coercion

Preventing and Responding to Gender-based Violence in Middle and Low-income Countries Sarah Bott, Andrew Morrison, Mary Ellsberg, 2005 Worldwide patterns of violence against women differ markedly from violence against men For example women are more likely than men to be sexually assaulted or killed by someone they know The United Nations has defined violence against women as gender based violence to acknowledge that such violence is rooted in gender inequality and is often tolerated and condoned by laws institutions and community norms Violence against women is not only a profound violation of human rights but also a costly impediment to a country's national development While gender based violence occurs in many forms throughout the life cycle this review focuses on two of the most common types physical intimate partner violence and sexual violence by any perpetrator Unfortunately the knowledge base about effective initiatives to prevent and respond to gender based violence is relatively limited Few approaches have been rigorously evaluated even in high income countries And such evaluations involve numerous methodological challenges Nonetheless the authors review what is known about more and less effective or at least promising approaches to prevent and respond to gender based violence They present definitions recent statistics health consequences costs and risk factors of gender based violence The authors analyze good practice initiatives in the justice health and education sectors as well as multisectoral approaches For each of these sectors they examine initiatives that have addressed laws and policies institutional reforms community mobilization and individual behavior change strategies Finally the authors identify priorities for future research and action including funding research on the health and socioeconomic costs of violence against women encouraging science based program evaluations disseminating evaluation results across countries promoting investment in effective prevention and treatment initiatives and encouraging public private partnerships

Buying your Way into Heaven ,2019-02-11 Education is commonly thought to be a haven for the young No matter how unstable the polity no matter how dismal the prospects for the economy education investments are often treated as sacrosanct This is one reason for the popularity of education as part of foreign aid Who could object to providing more opportunity for young people to study Recently however it has been discovered that education systems can be as corrupt as other parts of government and the economy and that values of fairness and impartiality once thought to be universal characteristics of education systems can be supplanted by the interests of specific individuals families and ethnic groups Education corruption has now been found in all regions of the world but it manifests itself in different ways How do these differ from one region to another What should be done to minimize education corruption And what should be done to protect universities and employers in areas situated where there is little corruption from the products of those parts of the world where education corruption is the norm This book will explain the meaning of education corruption and how it works it will provide illustrations from Asia Africa Southeastern Europe and the former Soviet Union and it will propose actions and policies on the part of regional and international agencies to counter act what is now likely to become a new and unexpected global crisis

Gender and HIV/AIDS Nana K. Poku,2016-04-15 Gender issues are central to the causes and impact of the ongoing AIDS epidemic The editors bring together cutting edge contemporary scholarship on gender and AIDS in one volume They address questions related to gender and sexuality how women and men live the epidemic differently and how such differences lead to different outcomes The volume joins research on Africa Asia and Latin America and illustrates how the epidemic has different gendered characteristics causes and consequences in different regions Collectively the chapters demonstrate the fundamental ways that gender influences the spread of the disease its impact and the success of prevention efforts This scholarly interdisciplinary volume provides a comprehensive introduction to the themes and issues of gender AIDS and global public health and informs students policy makers and practitioners of the complexity of the gendered nature of AIDS
