Recent Recruiting Trends And Their Implications For Models Of Enlistment Supply:

Recent Recruiting Trends and Their Implications for Models of Enlistment Supply, 1998 Concerns have arisen over the ability of the military services to meet their recruiting requirements over the next few years The number of recruiters and the advertising budget have been cut over the course of the drawdown as recruit cohorts have shrunk by over a third As compared with FY95 a 20 percent increase in accessions greater than 40 percent for the Army was needed by FY97 if the services were to meet the force strengths planned for that year Beginning in the early part of this decade anecdotal evidence suggested that recruiters had been having trouble achieving their goals A preliminary RAND investigation in 1994 indicated that there should not have been a supply shortage in the early to mid 1990s Here we revisit that question with a more thorough analysis restricting ourselves to supply projection models based on econometric analysis of specific supply and demand determinants Other parts of the larger research project examine other aspects of recruiting trends As the parameters in earlier models were estimated with data from the 1980s we re estimate the models with 1990s data to determine whether those parameters and thus the underlying supply process have changed We also determine whether any changes in factors influencing supply occurred Finally we use the updated model using 1990s data to predict the adequacy of supply in FY97

Defense Science Board. Task Force on Human Resources Strategy, 2000 The Department of Defense DoD employs more than three million people Nearly half of its personnel 1 44 million are active duty military About 870 000 Reservists composed of 410 000 Selected Reservists and 460 000 National Guard personnel add to the active duty force

Civilian personnel make up the remaining workforce numbering about 730 000 These three million employees are supported by an array of defense contractors providing a wide variety of goods and services to the Department Moreover the Department spends more than half of its 270 billion budget on pay and allowances alone With a workforce this large varied diverse and important it is not surprising that its management is a uniquely challenging undertaking The human resource challenges facing DoD have changed rapidly over the last decade as a result of many factors A robust economy civilian sector competition for employees to fill high technology positions declining American public interest in public service major changes in the Department s missions and operational tempo and a significant downsizing of the Department s workforce are a few examples Reducing the size of the overall workforce by more than a million personnel from a high in 1987 of 4.1 million has left in place a very different force distribution in age education and skill

Enlistment Decisions in the 1990s M.

Rebecca Kilburn, Jacob Alex Klerman, 1999 This work updates previous estimates of individual enlistment models investigating the relationship between family individual local labor market and other background characteristics and the decision to enlist The study makes three primary innovations to earlier models First it uses data from the early 1990s while the most recent estimates were from the early 1980s The data report the enlistment behavior of a cohort of individuals from the National Educational Longitudinal Study NELS who were high school seniors in 1992 In general the authors find that their coefficient estimates are similar to those estimated by earlier models while the mean levels of the explanatory variables are more often significantly different from those in earlier data Second the authors explore the utility of including some additional variables in the model that are more relevant to the 1990s or were not available in early data These include measures of immigrant status criminal behavior drug use in state college tuition and whether parents were in the military The research finds that immigrant status criminal behavior and having parents in the military are significant determinants of individual enlistment decisions Third the authors estimate the individual enlistment decision as a three choice decision whether to enlist enroll in college or work after high school graduation in contrast to earlier studies which modeled the enlistment decisions as a two way choice of whether to enlist or not The study concludes that the trivariate choice model dominates the bivariate model because it produces more significant coefficient estimates and yields more insights into the reasons that individuals enlist rather than choosing alternative activities
