Reporting Higher Education Results: Missing Links in the Performance Chain

Joseph C. Burke, Henrik P. Minassians, 2003-03-07 Performance reporting publishing information on the results of higher education at the state system and institutional levels is said to have the potential to enhance external accountability improve institutional performance further state needs and possibly even increase state funding But are campus administrators and public officials actually using these reports Does performance reporting really lead to these kinds of outcomes No study has ever tested the effectiveness of performance reporting until now This issue explores the origins and development of performance reporting examines the attitudes of state and campus leaders and discusses how these reports are or are not being put to use Burke and Minassians begin by tracing the rise of performance reporting amidst the demands for increased accountability in higher education in the late 80s and early 90s They examine the formats coverage and content of performance reports with a particular emphasis on how well suited they are to the needs of their end users in government and on campus and discuss how reporting indicators are selected and what the selection process tells us about policymakers goals values and models for excellence for public colleges and universities The authors then look at what state and campus officials think about performance reports and how they actually use them Burke and Minassians analyze the opinions of a geographically diverse group of governor's aides legislative chairs of education committees higher education finance officers and campus institutional researchers about the use effects and future of performance reporting and about the importance and appropriateness of the indicators most commonly used in performance reports Finally the authors discuss reasons why performance reporting does not yet seem to be having the strong positive impact envisioned by its supporters and they make recommendations about how to best use and improve performance information This is the 116th issue of the quarterly journal New Directions for Institutional Research

Toutkoushian, Ulrich Teichler, 2011-06-06 This ground breaking and exhaustive analysis of university ranking surveys scrutinizes their theoretical bases methodological issues societal impact and policy implications providing readers with a deep understanding of these controversial comparators The authors propose that university rankings are misused by policymakers and institutional leaders alike They assert that these interested parties overlook the highly problematic internal logic of ranking methodologies even as they obsess over the surveys assessment of their status The result is that institutions suffer from short termism realigning their resources to maximize their relative rankings While rankings are widely used in policy and academic discussions this is the first book to explore the theoretical and methodological issues of ranking itself It is a welcome contribution to an often highly charged debate Far from showing how to manipulate the system this collection of work by key researchers aims to enlighten interested parties

Understanding College and University Organization James L. Bess, Jay R. Dee, 2023-07-03 Now available in paperback this two volume work is intended to help readers develop powerful new ways of thinking about organizational principles and apply them to policy making and management in colleges and universities The book is written with two audiences in mind administrative and faculty leaders in institutions of higher learning and students both doctoral and Master s degree studying to become upper level administrators leaders and policy makers in higher education It systematically presents a range of theories that can be applied to many of the difficult management situations that college and university leaders encounter It provides them with the theoretical background to knowledgeably evaluate the many new ideas that emerge in the current literature and in workshops and conferences The purpose is to help leaders develop their own effective management style and approaches and feel confident that their actions are informed by appropriate theory and knowledge of the latest research in the field Without theory organizational leaders are forced to treat each problem that they encounter as unique as if it were a first time occurrence While leaders may have some experience with a particular issue their solutions are usually not informed by the accumulated wisdom of others who have already encountered and resolved similar situations The authors

approach the theory of the organization and administration of colleges and universities from three quite different perspectives or paradigms each relying on different assumptions about the reality of organizational life in colleges and universities The positivist paradigm primarily an omnibus systems theory integrates the chapters into a comprehensive yet easily accessible whole Social constructionism the second paradigm is introduced in each chapter to illuminate the difficulty of seeking and finding meaningful consensus on problems and policies while also addressing important ethical issues that tend to be overlooked in leadership thought and action The third paradigm postmodernism draws attention to difficulties of logic and communication under the constraints of strictly linear thinking that authorities at all levels attempt to impose on organizations This multiple paradigm approach enables readers to become more cognizant of their own assumptions how they may differ from those of others in their organization and how those differences may both create difficulties in resolving problems and expand the range of alternatives considered in organizational decision making The book offers readers the tools to balance the real world needs to succeed in today's challenging and competitive environment with the social and ethical aspirations of all its stakeholders and society at large The authors aim is to elucidate how administration can be made more efficient and effective through rational decision making while also respecting humanistic values This approach highlights a range of phenomena that require attention if the institution is ultimately to be considered successful Also available Volume 1 The State of the SystemTwo volume set The Analytics Revolution in Higher Education Jonathan S. Gagliardi, Amelia Parnell, Julia Carpenter-Hubin, 2023-07-03 Co published with and In this era of Big Data institutions of higher education are challenged to make the most of the information they have to improve student learning outcomes close equity gaps keep costs down and address the economic needs of the communities they serve at the local regional and national levels This book helps readers understand and respond to this analytics revolution examining the evolving dynamics of the institutional research IR function and the many audiences that institutional researchers need to serve Internally there is a growing need among senior leaders administrators faculty advisors and staff for decision analytics that help craft better resource strategies and bring greater efficiencies and return on investment for students and families Externally state legislators the federal government and philanthropies demand more forecasting and more evidence than ever before These demands require new and creative responses as they are added to previous demands rather than replacing them nor do they come with additional resources to produce the analysis to make data into actionable improvements Thus the IR function must become that of teacher ensuring that data and analyses are accurate timely accessible and compelling whether produced by an IR office or some other source Despite formidable challenges IR functions have begun to leverage big data and unlock the power of predictive tools and techniques contributing to improved student outcomes Handbook on Measurement, Assessment, and Evaluation in Higher Education Charles Secolsky, D. Shavelson, 2009-12-17 Accrediting boards the federal government and state legislatures are now requiring a greater level of accountability from higher education However current accountability practices including accreditation No Child Left Behind and performance reporting are inadequate to the task If wielded indiscriminately accountability can actually do more harm than good This innovative work looks broadly at how accountability is being considered by campuses accrediting boards higher education organizations and governments in the US and abroad It explores how new demands for accountability and new technologies are changing the way student learning is assessed The author one of the most respected assessment researchers in the nation provides a framework for assessing student learning and discusses historical and contemporary debates in the field He details new directions in assessment such as the Collegiate Learning Assessment he helped develop analyzes exemplary campus assessment programs and proposes considerations necessary for designing successful accountability systems

Shaping the College Curriculum Lisa R. Lattuca, Joan S. Stark, 2011-01-11 Shaping the College Curriculum focuses on curriculum development as an important decision making process in colleges and universities The authors define curriculum as an academic plan developed in a historical social and political context They identify eight curricular elements that are addressed intentionally or unintentionally in developing all college courses and programs By exploring the interaction of these elements in context they use the academic plan model to clarify the processes of course and program planning enabling instructors and administrators to ask crucial questions about improving teaching and optimizing student learning This revised edition continues to stress research based educational practices The new edition consolidates and focuses discussion of institutional and sociocultural factors that influence curricular decisions All chapters have been updated with recent research findings relevant to curriculum leadership accreditation assessment and the influence of academic fields while two new chapters focus directly on learning research and its implications for instructional practice A new chapter drawn from research on organizational change provides practical guidance to assist faculty members and administrators who are engaged in extensive program improvements Streamlined yet still comprehensive and detailed this revised volume will continue to serve as an invaluable resource for individuals and groups whose work includes planning designing delivering evaluating and studying curricula in higher education This is an extraordinary book that offers not a particular curriculum or structure but a comprehensive approach for thinking about the curriculum ensuring that important considerations are not overlooked in its revision or development and increasing the likelihood that students will learn and develop in ways institutions hope they will The book brings coherence and intention to what is typically an unstructured haphazard and only partially rational process guided more by beliefs than by empirically grounded substantive information Lattuca and Stark present their material in ways that are accessible and applicable across planning levels course program department and institution local settings and academic disciplines It s an admirable and informative marriage of scholarship and practice and an insightful guide to both Anyone who cares seriously about how we can make our colleges and universities more educationally effective should read this book Patrick T Terenzini distinguished professor and senior scientist Center for the Study of Higher Education The Pennsylvania State University
