On The Mountain:

On the Mountain Peggy Ann Craig, On a cold and still night a frightened woman makes a frenzied escape down a wooded mountainside Fear is her only companion Silence is her only salvation Anna Nicholson had lived all her life under the shadow of prejudice in the remote village high on Mount Louis whose reclusive people were considered as wild and primitive as the wilderness from which they lived So when she awakes one morning to find herself in a stranger's barn with a rifle to her face and no memory of how she got there she is overcome with a gripping fear Yet instinctively knew it did not arise from the big and burly cowboy standing directly behind the Winchester rifle or the other nine fierce cowboys who called the ranch home but instead from a memory she could not recall Mistaken for a mute teenage boy Anna is able to hide unseen and unheard from an evil lurking in the shadows Wade Haddock is the rough and tough but lonely cowboy who finds a frightened Anna in his barn Convinced the isolated wilderness was no place for a woman he allows Anna to hide away on his sprawling Rocky Mountain ranch believing her to be a mute teenage boy While gradually succumbing to the bond growing between them the wall around his guarded heart begins to slowly crumble Only to discover Anna's deception And a memory that could destroy their love
