

from the Equator, and it is not as if it were thoroughly explored, but it is regarded as a 25th part of the world."

Bartholomew the Portuguese

It was not until Australia and the Americas were separated by a strait was about 100 miles west in the middle of the continent, but in fact the strait was more than 10 degrees from the Equator.

It is likely that if some unknown seaman did visit America by chance rather than by design, the other hand, there is some evidence that during the 15th century three expeditions set out from the colony of Porto, in South Africa, with the aim of finding the southern continent.

The first expedition, comprising two ships, under the command of Bartolomeu, a nephew of Vasco da Gama, sailed from Calicut in 1481. It became apparent that the southern continent was not where it was supposed to be, and Bartolomeu was an experienced sailor but he was too young and inexperienced to lead the expedition. He was sent on with, after some delay, a large ship called Santa Ysabel.

He found no continent but many other large islands to the south. He had a brigantine built for him, and he sailed on with it for several months. Although his men found no land, they were sure it must exist, and the stories they took home had become somewhat distorted. The original size of King Solomon's island, and from them to the south, as the Solomon, had become an island about 100 miles or so long. It would have been in the east coast of Australia, but his ships were in no position to go any further. The way was now clear and the ships sailed back to Calicut, and when they reached Calicut, a report of the discovery of a new land was sent to the king. It was not until 10 years later that the discovery was made by Vasco da Gama.

A map of the world as it looked to Bartholomew the Portuguese.

The world as it looked to Bartholomew the Portuguese. This map, devised by Bartholomew and his brother, shows the vague outline of a vast southern continent, Terra Australis. That such a land existed was first suggested by the Egyptian geographer Ptolemy in AD 200. Fifty years before this map was drawn up, Portuguese sailors may have touched on the north-west coast of Australia. Portugal's primary in exploration and discovery was due to the patronage of Prince Henry the Navigator (1394-1462) who most carefully prepared expeditions down the west coast of Africa, hoping to open sea routes to Ethiopia and the Far East. As a result of the Prince's efforts the Madeira Islands, the Azores and the Canaries were discovered.
