Parren, Dossahua Traoré, 2005 Climbing plants including lianas represent a fascinating component of the ecology of tropical forests This book focuses on the climbing plants of West African forests Based on original research it presents information on the flora including a checklist diversity with overviews at several levels of integration ecology distribution characteristics in relation to environment their role in forest ecosystems and ethnobotany Forestry aspects such as their impact on tree growth and development and the effects of forestry interventions on climbers are also covered Kootenai National Forest (N.F.), Sparring Bulls, 2010 Forest Dynamics and Disturbance Regimes Lee E. Frelich, 2002-01-10 Temperate zone forests have been shaped by fire wind and grazing over thousands of years This book provides a major contribution to the study of their dynamics by considering three important themes The combined influence of wind fire and herbivory on the successional trajectories and structural characteristics of forests The interaction of deciduous and evergreen tree species to form mosaics which in turn influence the environment and disturbance regime The significance of temporal and spatial scale with regard to the overall impact of disturbances These themes are explored via case studies from the forests in the Lake States of the USA Minnesota Wisconsin and Michigan where the presence of large primary forest remnants provides a unique opportunity to study the long term dynamics of near boreal pine and hardwood hemlock forests. The comparability of these forests to forests in other temperate zones allows generalizations to be made that may apply more widely.
