A Last Frontier Iola Lytle Medd, Charles Leighton Medd, 2001-10 Today messages are sent with the click of a mouse. Few of us have time anymore to sit down and hand-write a letter. E-mail is in, and with the press of a key, the written words disappear as if they had never been. Sadly, the handwritten letter is becoming a thing of the past. In 1955, when two young starry-eyed Americans left to take up their post in northeast Thailand with the United States Information Agency, there was no such thing as E-mail. Had there been, this memoir would not exist. In Korat, Thailand, communication by means other than a letter required advance planning, practice, and patience. An overseas call had to be reserved in advance. The call was made from a radio station via short wave. It was a frustrating exercise: in speak, stop over, and listen; speak, stop over, and listen. Letters took two, sometimes three weeks to arrive; thus, answers to questions came six weeks after the fact. Despite the time lapse, our weekly letters home were treasured, passed around, and saved. Today, these letters tell the story of a different time, a distant place, and a forgotten era.
