

COLONIAL URBANISM

COLONIAL URBANISM:

In the late 19th century Britain became the most urbanized nation. When they started to rule India; Calcutta, Bombay and Madras became leading administrative, commercial and industrial cities. In 1911, the capital of British India was shifted to Delhi and it became a modern commercial and administrative area.

What was the purpose of colonial cities?

As commercial thoroughfares, they were central markets for colonies' crops, ores, and other output, and they stimulated the colonial "industry" of artisans and craftsmen. Finally, each port city was a center of the colony's political, social, religious, and intellectual life.

What are the characteristics of colonial cities?

The two basic characteristics of colonial cities built by Europeans from about 1500 to 1950 were that they were established at a distance from the metropole, and in a very different environment in terms of economy, society, polity, and culture.

Urbanization in Colonial India

• INTRODUCTION:

- Even since 2500 B.C., urban places have played an important role in the evolution of India's culture, economic and social life.
