Flannelly, 2017-04-08 This book provides a new perspective on the association between religious beliefs and mental health The book is divided into five parts the first of which traces the development of theories of organic evolution in the cultural and religious context before Charles Darwin Part II describes the major evolutionary theories that Darwin proposed in his three books on evolution and the religious sociological and scientific reactions to his theories Part III introduces the reader to the concept of evolutionary psychiatry It discusses how different regions of the brain evolved over time and explains that certain brain regions evolved to protect us from danger by assessing threats of harm in the environment including other humans Specifically this part describes how psychiatric symptoms that are commonly experienced by normal individuals during their everyday lives are the product of brain mechanisms that evolved to protect us from harm the prevalence rate of psychiatric symptoms in the U S general population how religious and other beliefs influence the brain mechanisms that underlie psychiatric symptoms and the brain regions that are involved in different psychiatric disorders Part IV presents the findings of U S studies demonstrating that positive beliefs about God and life after death and belief in meaning in life and divine forgiveness have salutary associations with mental health whereas negative beliefs about God and life after death belief in the Devil and human evil and doubts about one s religious beliefs have pernicious associations with mental health The last part of the book summarizes each section and recommends research on the brain mechanism underlying psychiatric symptoms and the relationships among these brain mechanisms religious beliefs and mental health in the context of ETAS Theory

The Cognitive Science of Religion James A. Van Slyke, 2016-03-23 The cognitive science of religion is a relatively new academic field in the study of the origins and causes of religious belief and behaviour The focal point of empirical research is the role of basic human cognitive functions in the formation and transmission of religious beliefs However many theologians and religious scholars are concerned that this perspective will reduce and replace explanations based in religious traditions beliefs and values This book attempts to bridge the reductionist divide between science and religion through examination and critique of different aspects of the cognitive science of religion and offers a conciliatory approach that investigates the multiple causal factors involved in the emergence of religion

Contemporary Evolutionary Theories of Culture and the Study of Religion Radek Kundt, 2015-11-19 Radek Kundt compares the notion of evolution in cultural evolutionary theories with neo Darwinian evolutionary theory to determine the value of the biological concept for studying culture Contemporary Evolutionary Theories of Culture and the Study of Religion surveys the historical background of cultural evolution as used in the study of religion pinpointing major objections to classical nineteenth century theories Radek Kundt argues that contemporary theories of cultural evolution do not repeat the same mistakes but that when they are evaluated in terms of fitting the core requirements of neo Darwinian natural selection it is clear that they are not legitimate extensions of neo Darwinian theory Rather they are poor metaphors and misleading analogies which add little to conventional cause and effect historiographical work This book also introduces an alternative evolutionary approach to the study of culture which does not claim that the principles of neo Darwinian evolution should be applicable outside the biological domain Radek Kundt shows that this alternative evolutionary approach nevertheless provides a deeply enriching line of enquiry that incorporates both biological evolutionary history as shaping cultural change and culture as a force acting on the gene
